At about daybreak he discovered a scho between Brenton's reef and the small reef, water logged, and at the mercy of the sea, which was making a clear breach over her. The crew, four in number, were in the rigging. He immediately sent a man to town for aid, and then proceeded to the beech, and made signs to the unfortunat-men that they were seen. At that time the schoon men that they were seen. At that time the school-er had struck the rocks, and turned over on her beam ends; the crew had descended from the rig-ging, and were endeavoring, by bracing against the quarter-deck, to retain their position. This they were enabled to do, until three heavy seas rolled in, and dashed her against the rocks heav-ily, and in a moment she was broken into frag-

The one still in the water had a piece of plants, and he pushed for the shore, where Mr. Bateman stood as far out as prudent, encouraging him by words. Several times the swimmer was near to the shore, and once caught hold of the pole extended to him, but he was washed back again; until, finally, seized by cramp probably, he threw up his hands, and went down within thirty feet of the shore. Two others were near together on the store.

the shore. Two others were near together on the spars, when one, losing his hand caught by the other, who tried to disengage himself, but before he could do so they both went down.

The fourth had a fearful struggle with death. He was on the spars, and was repeatedly washed off, but managed to get on again, bruised, crushed as the fragment were washed against him, and Mr. Bateman could hear him groan as he received blow after blow, but no aid could be extended to him, and finally his strength failed and he shared the fate of his companions. The shore is strewn with the remains of the wreck and from these we shall probably learn the name of the vessel.

While the schooner was knocking about, the crew in the rigging, a schooner passed the head of the reef on her way up, but no notice was taken of those in distress. Could all hands have been asleep close on a dangerous reef? And we may asteep close on a dangerous reel; And we may well ask what were they about on board the Light Ship? A small boat could easily have saved these unfortunate men. We hope some enquiry will be instituted by the public. The captain is ashore a great part of the time.

An Adventure in New Mexico.-The Browns ville Flag contains a communication in relation a difficulty which recently occurred between the S. troops stationed at Edinburg, on the Texas side of the Rio Grande, and the Mexican guard at Reynosa, on the opposite shore. The following is an extract from the letter, which is dated Edinburg, Nov. 28, and is said to be written by a gentleman whose word is entitled to belief:

tleman whose word is entitled to belief:

"Two non-commissioned officers and three privates sought and obtained permission from their commanding officer to visit Reynosa. They de layed their return until night, when, recrossing the American ferry boat, they were fired upon by the guard from the Mexican side, and compelled to land again on the right bank of the river. The commanding officer in Reynosa, hearing the firing, came down to the ford, and insisted on their returning to the town of Reynosa, promising the safe and comfortable quarters for the night. Th they declined at first, wishing to recross to the American camp, as their leave had expired; bu on the officer informing them that it was impossi-ble to permit them to cross till the morning, and that they were not safe at the ford, and that he could not be responsible for their persons or property unless they accompanied him to Reynose they consented to return with him. He put then they consented to return with him. He put them in the guard room, under charge of the guard. During the night the sergeant was awakened by the attempt of some person to force a gold ring off his little finger; he got up and followed the thief, and discovered in him the corporal of the guard. The sergeant then searched for his purse, pencil, and knife, which he had put under his head when retiring to sleep, but found to his dismay that they were all missing. He had two hundred and thirty dollars in his purse—all of which thus strangely disappeared in the safe quarters vouch-safed to him and his party by his amigo, the Commandate of Reynosa; on further inquiry, he found that all the others had been robbed also. When on their way first to the ford, one of the soldiers on their way first to the ford, one of the soldier took a by-way, which separated him from his com rades; he was afterwards set upon by four scoundrels with clubs, nearly killed, and also robbed of ten dollars; he is now in the hands of the doctor; his head is a most shocking sight to be hold; in fact, his escape with life is little short of a miracle. The amount of money and property thus stolen, amounts to three hundred dollars

Rhinehardt & Co., in Light near Mercer street, exploded, dreadfully, and we fear fatally injuring three men, and wounding we fear fatally injuring three men, and wounding more or less severely, four others. The names of those who it is feared will not survive, are, Augustus Fralinger, (engineer,) Charles Roessler and Julius Miller. Valentine Wilhelm is badly scalded, and has his leg broken. The other three, whose names are —— Knackstee, Joseph Gwin and Charles Gotthold, fortunately, are not very seriously injuried. The last named jumped from the window, and thus escaped more serious harm The cause of this calamity is involved in mystery The water was let into the boiler at 4 o'clock this morning, and at the time of the explosion the

was a sufficiency in the boiler.

The engine is of ten horse power, but, at the time of the explosion, there was not a fourth of it power on, the fire having been kindled anew this morning, as is usual on Mondays. In consequence of the steam having to be raised from cold water on Mondays, the hands—there were twenty employed—are not required to be present precisely at seven o'clock, otherwise the disaster would have been more disastrous. The building in which the engine and boiler were located, was almost en-tirely demolished, but had there been a full head of steam on, there is no imagining what an amount of damage would have been done. The loss is estimated at between six and eight thousand dollars, which, we are sorry to add, will fall entirely upon Messrs. Rhinehardt & Co.—Patriot, 2d.

Serious Collision on the Harlem Road.

About six o'clock on Monday evening, the Harlem train for this city was delayed in consequence of having repairs done to the snow plough attached to the engine. Signals ware placed a considerable distance each way from the train to protect it from danger, but it appears that those in charge one of the New Haven down trains failed to se the lights, and came into violent collision with the the lights, and came into violent collision with the Harlem train. Two cars on the latter were extensively damaged. A servant girl in the employ of Mr. Trowbridge, of Harlem, was severely injured; a child of Mr. Trowbridge, who was with her, was slightly injured. No other persons were hurt. The engine of the New Haven train was disabled, and an engine had to be brought from Mott Haven to bring the train to the city. The accident occasioned quite a panic among the passengers, and it is singular that not more were injured.

Would'nt Take off His Hat .- One of the mos summary methods of disposing of a case of this kind that we have witnessed in some time, hapkind that we have witnessed in some time, happened in the police court recently. The court room was crowded by the great press of business, and the magistrate made an order that every one present should take off his hat. A fellow who refused to give his name, but who proved to be Aaron Keen, would not submit to the order, and pertinaciously insisted on keeping on his hat. On being remonstrated with, he became very noisy; defied the court and all its officers, and assaulted officer Mack. He was immediately arraigned, and sentenced to the jail for five days, the full imprisonment given by the statue. The effect upon the audience was electric, and a more orderly body of men than the spectators were after that, is seldom seen—Albany Journal.

The New York Aldermen .- The Court Appeals at Albany on Saturday decided that the aldermen of New York city, in disobeying the in-junction, some months since, in relation to passing the grant for the Broadway Railroad, were in con-tempt, and unanimously affirmed the judgment of Justice Duer. It will be recollected that on the 12th of March last several members of both boards were brought up before the Superior Court, and, having been convicted of contempt, were various-ly sentenced. Alderman Sturtevant was ordered to be imprisoned in the city prison for the space of fif-teen days, and to pay a fine of $250 and $92 costs. Others escaped the sentence of imprisonment, but were mulcted in like fine and costs.

The whole crossing, from prairie to prairie occupies from five to seven days. It is traveled by the Indians in three or four. The Bitter Root mountains are not practicable for a railroad, or any other kind of a road; but the can be wholly avoided by passing from the outlet of the Black Foot trail a little north, and following the usual route of the Hudson's Bay Company in their excursions to that region This route is wholly in the territory of th United States. Major Stevens will thoroughly explore the Bitter Root range, and may find a better pass than I crossed through in 1851 and during my late trip. The last trail is called the "Grand" trail of the Nezperees Indians, and is over a series of mountains-one route one hundred and thirty miles, very steep and rocky; the other two hundred and ten miles. the mountains almost equally elevated, but not so rocky, more numerous, however. Both of these routes are out of the question. My own impression has always been, and still is, that the shores of the Columbia river afford the most practicable route for a railroad through the Cascade mountains. The route passes north of the Blue mountain range. The whole route is entirely practicable, as no doubt will be fully demonstrated by Major Stevens. The Major and his party have all enjoyed good nealth, and are getting on finely. The Major himself is an energetic man, and has accom plished wonders for one season, but unavoidably at a very great expense.

Major Stevens contemplates leaving a po tion of the stores at Fort Owen, and a small party under Lieutenant Mullin, to operate during the winter. If the passage of the wagons cause much delay, Major Stevens will hurry on to Washington Territory, leaving the train in charge of some suitable officer. The party is no doubt all over by this time, and Major S. may be expected in about ten days or two weeks. My own trip has been eminently successful, beyond my expectations, almost the whole way through a country not previously explored.
