ADVANCEMENT OF THE LOBSTER

Mr. Barrett Engaged in Elevating Marine Life.

Mr. William J. Barrett of the Pacific coast is in town. Mr. Barrett is returning from New York, where he went more than a month ago to witness the trial of the submarine boat Fulton, which was very successful and of which the world has already heard. Every American felt a patriotic interest in that trial, but Mr. Barrett's interest was more than patriotic; it was personal. Submarine boats are made for the purposes of war, but to Mr. Barrett alone of all the people of the United States it occurred that they may be successfully applied to the arts of peace.

Everybody knows Billy Barrett, though many may not remember him in the alias of William J. Barrett, which sounds distant and formal, neither of which he is. He is also popularly known as "the jolly glad-hander," on account of his cordial manner. Nor is it all manner, but rather nature. He is always trying to do something for somebody and in consequence his friends are trying to do something for him. The efforts of a Seattle friend in this direction were eminently successful and Mr. Barrett is now on the way to wealth by a hitherto untraveled route. He is pursuing his way along the broad avenue alone and undisturbed by competition.

Some time ago, when the people of Seattle were confidentially telling the word that that city was destined to shortly become the metropolis of the coast, a real estate friend let him in on the ground floor. He sold him a few lots in the sound country; they were not exactly in Seattle, but they would shortly be within its expanding limits.

Last summer in the dull season Mr. Barrett went to see his real estate. He had been engaged in booming Seattle and telling his friends that it was the coming town and he advised them to get in. On his arrival at Seattle he met with some difficulty in locating his possessions. With the help of a surveyor he ascertained that they were a mile out in the Sound. That discovery would have been depressing to a less elastic soul than Mr. Barrett, and even he for a time was at a loss to know to what use he could put his property. But he was buoyed up by his beautiful religious faith. He knew that God makes everything for some useful purpose. It only devolved on Mr. Barrett to find out what God intended that Sound real estate for. He spent a night in prayer and conjecture. In the morning it was all clear to him; he thought it was strange that he hadn't thought of it without divine direction. He decided to establish a lobster farm. He would also set out an abalone orchard and a shrimp vineyard and between seasons would cultivate catfish and codfish and shrimps ever since there were men, but man has never made any attempt to improve them. Lobsters, catfish and even dogs have been brought to a high degree of excellence, but the lobster has made no advance whatever. Mr. Barrett saw spread before him a great and untrodden field for the improvement of the lobster. Only those who live near the habitat of the lobster know that when he emerges from the water he is an unsightly green. The lobster of commerce is given his beautiful carmine hue by boiling, a painful process. Mr. Barrett determined to raise red lobsters. He furthermore devised a plan by which lobsters would catch and can themselves.

When most men engage in a new enterprise they meet with obstacles. Mr. Barrett has encountered none. He has on all hands received the most friendly encouragement and assistance. In the way of getting his wares before the public. Even his advertisement is paid for by Mr. H. J. Allen of Jerome and Mr. C. J. Hall of this city at the regular local rates.

Mr. Allen has designed a label for Mr. Barrett's lobster cans. The chief feature of the label is the unsaid countenance of Mr. Barrett surrounded by a wreath of glad hands and the whole design is enclosed by a wreath of red lobsters fresh from the water. Mr. Allen has also caused to be drawn by a competent artist a couple of designs for cards to be hung up in the grocery stores where Mr. Barrett's products are offered for sale.

There are two of these designs. The center figure of one represents a summer shower in which Mr. Barrett has been caught. His countenance betrays discomfort and he is heard to be wishing for an umbrella. Nearby is a sympathetic blonde lady who is just outside the edge of the storm and can afford to be sympathetic. The center figure is surrounded by smaller pictures, all suggestive of Mr. Barrett's new enterprise. A couple of catfish with broad grins are standing on their tails shaking fins with each other, an accomplishment taught them by Mr. Barrett. Laughing lobsters in red are cordially clasping each other by the flippers. Artistic ornaments of the picture there are wreaths and festoons of glad hands. The chief incident of the other design is also a marine view in which Mr. Barrett appears to be engulfed in angry waves and calling for help. The margin as in the other is filled in with sketches of joyous lobsters and happy catfish, all emulating Mr. Barrett in the use of his good right arm.

Soon after Mr. Barrett embarked in marine farming he went to Los Angeles, whether his agricultural fame had preceded him, and a banquet was prepared for him by the Elks and other friends of the gladhander. The decorations were lobsters, some red and some green. The piece de resistance was a patrician lobster. At each end of the table was a smaller lobster and the chandeliers glowed and creaked with the weight of the lobsters suspended from them. The conversation at the dinner was confined exclusively to the lobster.

It was about this time that Mr. Barrett heard that the Holland company had finished the submarine boat, the Fulton, and was going to give it a trial in New York bay on the following Saturday. He hurried on to New York and was permitted to go down in the boat, which remained at the bottom of the bay for thirty hours. He says the experiment was successful beyond the expectations of the company. He does not know what effect the new submarine boat will have on naval warfare, but he is certain that it will revolutionize the cultivation of lobsters, shrimp and catfish in Puget sound. It will enable the cultivator to get on more familiar terms with the fish and the crustaceans. By his personal presence he can advise and encourage them to greater efforts. It is with fish that it is with everything else—they cannot be improved and advanced morally and physically until their confidence has been gained. Hitherto Mr. Barrett has had to visit his farm in a launch. He was so far above them that the fish thought he was constrained and distant and that he felt only a sordid commercial interest in their welfare. By means of a submarine boat he can put himself on their level and show them that he is their friend as he is the friend of everybody else. Mr. Barrett ordered a boat on the spot. It will be built for him as soon as the Holland company fills its contract with the government. It will be called the Lancia, named after a Pullman car in which Mr. Barrett once rode on his way to Phoenix, a journey with which memory lingers.

WHAT GOES UP

Must Come Down.

Nothing is more certain than that the use of so called tonics, stimulants and medicines, which depend upon alcohol for their effect, is injurious to health in the long run.

What goes up must come down and the elevation of spirits, the temporary exhilaration resulting from a dose of medicine containing alcohol, will certainly be followed in a few hours by a corresponding depression to relieve which another dose must be taken.

In other words, many liquid patent medicines derive their effect entirely from the alcohol they contain.

Alcohol, and medicines containing it, are temporary stimulants and not in any sense a true tonic. In fact it is doubtful if any medicine or drug is a real tonic.

A true tonic is something which will renew, replenish, build up the exhausted nervous system and wasted tissues of the body, something that will enrich the blood and endow it with the proper proportions of red and white corpuscles, which prevent or destroy disease germs. This is what real tonics should do and no drug or alcoholic stimulant will do it.

The only true tonic in nature is wholesome food, thoroughly digested. Every particle of nervous energy, every minute muscle, fibre and drop of blood is created daily from the food we digest.

The mere eating of food has little to do with the repair of waste tissue but the perfect digestion of the food eaten has everything to do with it.

The reason so few people have perfect digestion is because from wrong habits of living the stomach gradually loses the power to secrete the gastric juice, pepsines and acids in sufficient quantity.

To cure indigestion and stomach troubles it is necessary to take after meals some harmless preparation which will supply the natural gastric juice, pepsines and acids in sufficient quantity.

One of two of these excellent tablets taken after meals will prevent souring, fermentation and acidity and insure complete digestion and assimilation of food.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are equally valuable for little children as for adults, as they contain nothing harmful or stimulating but only the natural digestives.

One of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will digest 1,500 grains of meat, eggs or other wholesome food, and they are in every sense a genuine tonic because they bring about in the only natural way a restorative of nerve power, a building up of lost tissue and appetite. In the only way it can be done by the digestion and assimilation of wholesome food.

KEPT AWAKE BY STILLNESS.

There is a general shutdown of the principal mines of Angels Camp, says a Stockton dispatch to the San Francisco Chronicle, owing to the fact that the Utah ditch, which supplies them with water power, has been shut off since Thursday last. The shutting off of the water has brought about a peculiar condition of affairs in Angels Camp. It is the first time for a long period that the stamp mills have been silent, and residents of the town are unable to sleep at night, owing to the absence of the thunder of the stamp mills.

A UNIFORM FRANCHISE.

Congress is authorized by the constitution "to establish a uniform rule of naturalization," and that power should be exercised. The occasion is urgent, because the quality of immigration is deteriorating. We apprehend it is not in the power of congress to annul state laws which confer the suffrage on uneducated immigrants, but the states ought to repeal such provisions. Men to whom the federal government refuses the right of citizenship because they are uneducated immigrants ought not to vote in state elections directly affecting national interests.—Washington Post.

ADOPTED A MARRIED MAN.

Reading, Pa.—An order was made in court this week allowing Daniel L. Saul of Shoemakersville to adopt Daniel Brandon, a married man, as a son and heir. He will now take the name of Saul. Mr. Saul's petition says he is without children and that Mr. Brandon has lived in his family since childhood. His father is dead. While his mother is married again she consents to the adoption.—New York World.
