The Arizona Republican, Saturday Morning, October 21, 1911.

ARIZONA

Overland, and Gazette between deed, TELEPHONES:

Phoenix, himself. numerous paycar information.

foisted subscribers and industries, since tariff. The Sugar dustry, of thousands articles American were needed. if scrutiny election was going on, the tariff for importation of sugar was raised.

The sugar industry was one of the most important industries at that time, and the tariff was a hot topic.

There is no industry that is independent of the others, and the sugar industry is no exception. It is dependent on the market for its survival.

The tariff was a way for the government to control the market and protect domestic industries.

However, the high price of sugar was not acceptable to the public, and they demanded a lower price. The government was caught in a situation where it had to choose between protecting domestic industries and lowering the price of sugar.

The sugar industry was caught in a similar situation. They were dependent on the market for their survival, but they also needed protection from foreign competition.

The government had to find a way to balance these needs, and the tariff was one tool it used to achieve this balance.

The tariff was a complex issue that had many sides, and it continues to be a topic of debate today.