Special Correspondence.
New York, Feb. 27.—"You can tell the people of America that we will begin giving Mr. Rockefeller's fund at once."

Frederick T. Gates made this statement in an interview with The Evening Citizen's correspondent at his office, 28 Broadway, in which he described the financial workings of the great fund of $22,000,000 which Mr. Rockefeller has given to the colleges of America to be distributed through the general education board.

Mr. Gates is chairman of the financial committee of the board, and in his hands rests this immense fund. He does not propose to let it remain in his hands long, however. With the other officers of the board he has already begun the distribution to various institutions, west and east and south.

"There seems to be a misunderstanding on the part of the public regarding the method in which this money will be given to the colleges," said Mr. Gates. "We have received scores and hundreds of letters from colleges and all kinds of institutions of learning, asking for a portion of this $22,000,000."

"Now the $22,000,000 itself is not to be disbursed. This is a mistake. And it would be a financial mistake to give away the principal of the fund. The income from this $22,000,000 will be paid out through the channels of the board, and we shall begin at once."

"The interest which we will have at our disposal will amount approximately to $4,329 a day—you can figure yourself just what the monthly and yearly income will be. Our income will be permanent and regular."

"One feature which has not been brought before the public so far is the fact that we shall include women's colleges in our list of institutions to be helped. I will say that in this we are anticipating a little, as the board has not yet officially decided on this step nor selected the women's colleges to receive aid from the fund."

"It is impossible for me or for the board to give out at this time the names of the colleges that will receive help from the fund. We have plans for helping hundreds of them. These plans are tentative, and I will say that some of the colleges themselves do not yet know what we have in mind under consideration."

"The board is made up of eight men and in this lies the secret of our economical administration. It cost us about $20,000 last year to administer the funds then in hand, and this cost was very small considering the size of the funds."

HOW A COLLEGE'S REQUEST IS HANDLED BY THE BOARD.
Dr. Butterick, secretary of the general education board, cites the following as a typical case which shows the method of handling a request by a college to be made a beneficiary of the fund:

"The college president, or some member of the board of trustees, writes to the board and asks for an application blank. The reply he receives states that the board has no application blanks and asks him to write out his proposition, giving detailed information about his college, its aims, plans, desires, and a copy of its charter and financial statement."

"The answer nearly always indicates to the board many things which it would be impossible to learn from an answer on a printed blank. The financial statement, its form as well as its substance, often indicating how the institution keeps its books and its ideas of accounting. The description of the college, plus what they want it to be, discloses their ideas of a college."

"Every detail of the information reported, together with the request, is tabulated and filed at the office of the board, so that it can be found within a minute."

A POOR PASTOR ONCE; NOW HANDLES MILLIONS.
Frederick T. Gates is a Baptist minister, 54 years old. His father before him was a Baptist minister on $400 a year. The young man educated himself, and finally was given a charge in Minneapolis.

He showed his administrative ability when in six weeks he raised $50,000 for a small academy in Minnesota, and he was then made chief executive officer of the American Baptist Education society.

In 1889 he was instrumental in persuading Rockefeller to create the University of Chicago. The once poor Baptist preacher then became Rockefeller's right hand man in matters of educational gifts. He lives at Montclair N. J., and is president of thirteen of Rockefeller's corporations.

MALICE MADE AN END OF LOVE BUT CUPID

Sood Found Another Victim— Romantic Story of the Minister From Nicaragua.

Washington, Feb. 27.—Miss India Bell Vedder Fleming, a debutante of a few months and one of the most popular young society women of the national capital, has become the bride of Dr. Don Luis F. Corea, Nicaraguan minister to the United States. The ceremony was performed at the residence of Colonel and Mrs. Robert L. Fleming, the parents of the bride, and was the great event of the year in diplomatic and official society. The guests numbered some of the most important people of Washington, including representatives of nearly every foreign government. Numerous handsome presents were received by the bride, those from the diplomatic representatives of Latin-American countries being especially notable for their magnificence and value.

The bride is the only daughter of Colonel and Mrs. Fleming, who reside at 1406 Massachusetts avenue. Colonel Fleming was a distinguished officer in the confederate army. On her maternal side the new Mrs. Corea is descended from Colonel Vedder, an officer of the regular army and the uncle of Elihu Vedder, the famous painter. The Flemings are wealthy and the bride is heiress to a comfortable fortune. She graduated from a fashionable Washington seminary last June and on December 7 last, made her formal debut in Washington society. She was admitted to the most beautiful debutante of the season and immediately became the center of attraction for a host of admirers. From the time of her first meeting with the swarthy diplomat from Nicaragua an immediate attachment sprang up, which had its culmination in today's wedding.

Mrs. Corea is only twenty years of age, while the groom is nearly forty. Senator Corea came here in 1899 as the representative and protégé of President Zelaya, of Nicaragua, and is one of the best known and most popular Latin-Americans in Washington. From the first he enjoyed the personal friendship of Secretary John Hay, and has since become a decided favorite with President Roosevelt. He is a man of culture and refinement, an accomplished linguist, handsome of face and courtly of bearing, and these attributes immediately made him popular in diplomatic and official circles. His history in Washington has been a series of successes, except in one instance, which came near ending his diplomatic and social career. That was when he was fitted by a handsome and wealthy widow, then Mrs. Hah Dunlap Jordan, of Macon, Ga., now Mrs. John D. Little. Mrs. Jordan broke her engagement with Dr. Corea, principally because of rumors to the effect that he had negro blood in his veins. As a loyal southern woman she feared that she could not be happy with Corea when such a doubt existed in her mind, and consequently gave him up.

Dr. Corea, however, was not deterred by this. He continued to live in Washington, and in 1901 he was appointed minister to the United States. He has since then been a constant presence in the social and diplomatic life of the capital.

Dr. Corea is a man of great energy and determination. He has a strong sense of duty and a deep love for his country. He has been a member of the United States Senate and has served as a member of the House of Representatives. He has also been a member of the Supreme Court of Nicaragua.

HOUSE OF LORDS ONLY FIFTH WHEEL

Lords Spiritual as Usual Are the Most Ultra Conservative in Every Way.

London, Feb. 27.—If the movement for the abolition of the house of lords, begun in earnest with the opening of parliament two weeks ago, has frightened the members of that august body and caused them to resolve to lead better and more useful lives, the English public knows nothing of it. If appearances count for anything, the lords are determined to adhere to their obstructive tactics, to the bitter end, if need be. Many of them have openly expressed their contempt for the "blatant demagogues" of the house of commons and declared that they would neither ask nor accept any compromise in the coming fight. Apparently it is to be war to the knife and the knife to the hilt, with a combination between the crown and the people to defeat the nobles. In case of a popular uprising against the lords, there is little doubt that King Edward will take his stand with the people. Edward is decidedly enamored of the king job and is not likely to put the future of himself and the royal family in jeopardy for the sake of a gang of headstrong aristocrats who don't know on which side their bread is buttered.

The house of lords as at present composed consists of three princes of the royal family, two archbishops and twenty-four bishops or lords spiritual, twenty-two dukes, twenty-three marquesses, thirty-five viscounts, sixteen Scottish and twenty-eight Irish peers, 125 earls and 316 barons, a total of 593 members. Not since parliament convened, however, has there been anything even faintly resembling such an assemblage of nobles. The average attendance since the session began has been less than forty. The presence of thirty members is sufficient to decide the most important matters, and three lords can form a house and transact business of minor importance.

As a legislative body the lords of England are not given to the strenuous life advocated by a certain famous American. The lords "sit" at 4 o'clock in the afternoon and they usually "rise" at 4:30, the average session lasting only about thirty minutes. Upon several days in the week the lords are in session for ten or fifteen minutes.

The lords look down with supreme contempt upon the impassioned debaters of the house of commons, who swing their arms and talk as if they were really in earnest. Any exhibition of enthusiasm and earnestness is frowned upon by the lords, who look upon it as a breach of etiquette meriting expulsion, if that were possible without effort. The "debates" are carried on in low, sing-song tones, wholly without inflection or intelligent expression—a monotonous drawl, at a slight distance like the buzzing of bees on a window pane. It is not uncommon to see supposedly dignified nobles sound asleep on the lounge, called benches, supplied by an indulgent government for their convenience.

"During the four hundred years of its existence," said a certain famous cabinet member not long ago, "the house of lords has never contributed one iota to the popular freedom, or anything to advance the common weal; on the contrary, it has protected every abuse and sheltered every privilege, denying justice and delaying reform."

If this is true of the hereditary nobles, it is doubly true of the archbishops and bishops, the lords spiritual of the house. Every reform measure has met with their determined and at times spiteful opposition. The bill granting the people the right of suffrage was fought by the religious members, who voted solidly against it. At one time there were over 200 offenses punishable with death on the statute books of England. Every bill to abolish capital punishment for small offenses has been passed in spite of the opposition of the lords spiritual, not one of whom has ever voted in favor of such a measure. It is by such tactics as these that the bishops have involved the house of lords in the fight on the house of commons, and it is more than likely that it will fall with its creator.

It was a Famous Victory.

On the eve of the German Reichstag elections these dispatches announced that the socialists were certain of a great increase in their vote. Since that time the cables have been kept hot with particulars regarding the Kaiser's "famous victory." The socialists' representation in the present Reichstag is announced with a great flourish of trumpets, is only forty-three, as against seventy-nine in the previous Reichstag. In spite of this, however, it is to be noted that the socialist popular vote was 2,600,000, an increase of a quarter million. The Kaiser's victory over the reds was a glorious one, if what Americans term "graft" is ever glorious.
