

HER DUKE MUST PAY ALL HIS DEBTS

Mrs. Shonts Says He Will Pay, But the Money Won't Come From Theodore Shonts.

New York, April 2.—The army of creditors of the Duc de Chaulnes, which gathered in Paris last Friday, coincident with the arrival of the duke on his honeymoon trip in the city, is having their claims paid by him as his marriage "dot," can take heart, according to the statement made by Mrs. Theodore P. Shonts. Mrs. Shonts says that her ducal son-in-law will pay his just debts like any other gentleman.

But not with Theodore P. Shonts' money. The tailors, the bootmakers, the shirtmakers, the florists who furnished him with flowers to abet his wooing of Miss Theodora Shonts, the jeweler who furnished the engagement ring, and even the melancholy undertaker who buried a former sweetheart of De Chaulnes and is still waiting for payment, must be patient. He is going to work and earn the money to pay all just claims against him. So says Mrs. Shonts.

Agreed to Separation of Property.

Monsieur le Marquis, guardian and man of affairs of the De Chaulnes family, who was besieged for the money, which, in their heated imaginations, had been showered upon his daughter's husband by Shonts on the occasion of the wedding, told them that he had no money to pay. He explained that De Chaulnes had married Miss Shonts under an agreement of separation of property, which held good both in the United States and France.

Mrs. Shonts today confirmed this announcement.

"No," replied Mrs. Shonts, in direct answer to a direct question. "Mr. Shonts did not pay any of the duke's debts, nor does he anticipate paying any. Of course, he was aware that the duke might have debts—most young men have, but it was understood, and it is the duke's desire, that he should look out for himself, meet his own obligations, you know, and not in any way be dependent."

Paris Astonished at the Agreement.

This agreement being such a startling one in the marriages of daughters of wealthy Americans to impoverished noblemen, the creditors of the duke in Paris would hardly believe it. Mrs. Shonts' sympathies are all with the duke in his troubles with his creditors.

"We are not at all surprised that he should have debts," she said. "We know about that sort of thing—the tailor that sued him."

"And the undertaker who buried him?"

"I know nothing about that," Mrs. Shonts hurriedly interrupted with gentle finality.

No Use to Die

"I have found out that there is no use to die of lung trouble as long as you can get Dr. King's New Discovery," says Mrs. J. P. White, of Rushboro, Pa. "I would not be alive to-day if it were not for that wonderful medicine. It loosens up a cough quicker than anything else, and cures lung disease even after the case is pronounced hopeless." This most reliable remedy for coughs and colds, influenza, asthma, bronchitis and hoarseness, is sold under guarantee at all dealers'. 50c and $1.00. Trial bottle free.

He Got What He Needed.

"Nine years ago it looked as if my time had come," says Mr. C. Farthing of Mill Creek, Ind. Ter. "I was so run down that life hung on a very slender thread. It was then my druggist recommended Electric Bitters. I bought a bottle and I got what I needed—strength. I had one foot in the grave, but Electric Bitters put it back on the turf again, and I've been well ever since." Sold under guarantee at all dealers at 50c.

BRITISH OPPOSE ASIATIC LABOR

The Importance of Protection Against Cheap Labor Emphasized.

London, April 2.—The question of the increasing employment of Chinese labor on English trading ships, which Mr. Fenwick drew attention to in the House of Commons last week, is one of vital importance. It is urged that ship owners are evading the law and escaping their liabilities under such measures as the workmen's compensation act. Havelock Wilson, who recently exposed the dangers of Chinese immigration, went so far as to state that during the past year something like 50 per cent of either Chinese or Lascars had taken the place of British labor on tramp steamers. A very strong protest, too, was made by John Ward, who said that organized labor in this country would most strenuously oppose the ousting of British labor by Asiatics, a sentiment which was freely endorsed by the various speakers. The government, however, does not seem to take so serious a view of this matter as the labor members claim it should do. The parliamentary secretary to the board of trade explained that his department had already made inquiries into the subject, and he had been informed by port officials that there was undoubtedly a tendency toward the employment of Chinamen in home ports. The request for a select committee to investigate the question made by Mr. Fenwick he hoped would not be pressed, as he was quite certain that the board of trade would be able to deal with the matter. The resolution was withdrawn and the matter ended for the time being. But unless some firm and effective steps are taken now to check the steady and growing influx of Chinese sailors on British ships, the matter may easily become too big to handle effectively. The reason for the employment of Asiatics in the place of British labor is obvious. They accept lower wages, and they also submit to a much cheaper scale of diet, and, further, the owners have not the same responsibility toward them as they would have to British seamen. In these days of cutting rates, ship owners have every incentive to economize at the expense of the seaman.

Depression in Shipbuilding.

An English shipbuilder, who necessarily complains of a pretty sensitive finger on the pulse of trade, says that the current depression is the worst in twenty years. Many causes of this deplorable state of matters could, he admitted, be cited, but in spite of the arguments that were urged for the majority of them, two most disquieting facts of the situation persisted in worrying him. The average man inclined to laugh at foreign competition in shipbuilding. That was because the average man did not care about looking facts in the face. The first fact which disquieted this shipbuilder was that in 1907 more ships were built in the United Kingdom or foreign waters than in 1906, and the second was that more ships were built abroad in 1907 than in 1906. Not only were foreign shipbuilders cutting into England's business to a larger extent, but the British were more and more equipping foreign shipowners whose economic advantages were already numerous with the means of making British shipbuilding less and less profitable. British shipbuilders were not to be blamed for this, of course, but people who talked lightly about foreign competition could not be allowed to ignore this reacting effect. Foreign competition was a stern reality. Dutch and German builders were actually quoting better prices for cargo steamers than the English were. Germany was cutting England out for river craft in South America and elsewhere. Even England's practical monopoly of the construction of torpedo craft was menaced, as the tenders for the Portuguese boats recently went to show. Not only were there German and French concerns in this competition, but Italian and American as well.

After Fluding Officers for Years the Wyckliffes Fell Out and One Was Killed.

Muskogee, Ok., April 2.—Whether Charles Wyckliffe was killed accidentally or purposely by his brother, Thomas Wyckliffe, his death removes from activity one of the most noted outlaws that ever made history in Oklahoma. Three thousand dollars reward, dead or alive, is a pretty big sum of money to be placed upon the heads of three men, and yet for two years they have gone about among their friends in the Cherokee nation as they pleased, and hundreds of persons have seen and talked with them but they have always eluded capture and placed in ignominious defeat the United States government in its efforts to capture them.

Called Them Weaklings.

This was one of the reasons that Tom and John Wyckliffe were insistent that they come in and throw themselves on the mercy of the state courts on promise they would not be turned over to the federal officers, and that they would be given a square deal. Charles Wyckliffe, who is supposed to be the one of the three who killed Deputy Marshal Ike Gilstrap, would not hear to this and upbraided his younger brothers for being weaklings, which led to ill feeling between these men, who, with a price on their heads and in constant danger of betrayal, were in need of the closest concert of action.

How the Feud Started.

The Wyckliffe boys have been in the "out" for five years. In 1903 Captain J. A. White, a deputy marshal at Vinita, went to the Wyckliffe home and finding the father, John Wyckliffe, there demanded information as to the whereabouts of the boys who were wanted then on a charge of shooting hogs. They were refused the information and the Wyckliffes say that Captain White and his companions beat their father in the head with six-shooters until he was nearly dead.

Bloodhounds on the Trail.

The murder of Vior was followed by the greatest activity ever shown by the federal government in attempting to run down a criminal in old Indian Territory. W. H. Darrough was marshal in the northern district. He immediately placed every man at his command in the Cherokee hills, secured bloodhounds, and the man hunt went on unceasingly night and day for weeks.
