AFFAIRS AT WASHINGTON.

The funeral of President Taylor was celebrated with great solemnity on Saturday. The memories of the Soldier were with the ceremonies appropriate to the office which he held at his death. But it matters little. The telegraph further informs us that while his body was lying in the East room of the White House, robberies to a large amount were committed in the crowd which gathered around it, and that when the fact became known, the doors were fastened with the intent of making a search, and that "the people" (the thieves of course,) being indignant at this proceeding, burst open the doors.

The scene within the room was no bad illustration of the doings of the political world without.
