The Freeman

The Freeman is a weekly newspaper published in Montpelier, Vermont. It was owned and operated by John T. Houghden and was known for its editorials and articles on local and national news. The newspaper was a platform for discussing various topics, including politics, religion, and social issues. The Freeman was a significant publication in Vermont and beyond, providing readers with a wide range of content that was relevant to the times. Its pages contained not only news and articles but also advertisements and notices pertinent to the community. The newspaper was published weekly and continued to operate until it ceased publication in 1925.