

Poetry. From the Boston Miscellany. AN EVENING IN SUMMER. BY CHARLES G. EASTMAN.

The sun is down, dark grow the glades— The stars are gazing in the deep; And o'er the earth, night's misty shades Are stealing, like a dream in sleep.

The twilight fades, and all the earth, The night with solemn gladness fills, The moon, as fair as at her birth, Where heaven is wedded to the hills.

Through fleecy clouds around her flung, Wheels up, besides the same sweet star, That with her, when the sky was young, Looked over Eden from afar;

And small white clouds, like tufts of down, Blown o'er the bosom of the deep, Are wandering round the mountain brown, As sweet thoughts wander when we sleep;

While, faintly, in the west afar, Is lingering still the day's last light, Around those kindly hills that bar The circled heavens from our sight.

The cool breeze sweeps the dark blue lake The wild brook in its sweet self sings, And the quick bird now awake, Brushes the wave with glancing wings.

Sweet Hope, with fair and gentle smiles, Looks in the sick man's face and tells, How fresh-lipp'd health, from fairy isles, Is in that cool breeze as it swells.

Oh! would that thou wert here to gaze With me upon this evening sky, To hear the rising wind that plays Among the tree tops green and high—

Stirring their myriad leaves, until Their murmur'd music swells along With all its utterances, that fill The world with a perpetual song.

With thee beside me, O! more pure Would be the prayer I send on high, And I more meekly should endure Life's sorrows, from thy tender eye:

Thy love would teach me what no book O'er which I've pined for years, hath taught, Calmly on baffled hopes to look, And bless the changes they have wrought.

Headache—This disease is one from which arises more misery to the human family than is generally supposed, not being directly fatal, it is often neglected.

It taken a few times in as many hours, when all these indications of an approaching attack, it is sure in all cases to prevent the attack.

This is a fair and candid statement of facts, that might be substantiated by the affidavits of perhaps two hundred persons in the city of New York who are so afflicted.

By my I ask, should the "profession" rail at Patent medicine proprietors and vendors, while so eminent physicians are at first inclined for the celebrity they acquire.
