THE ARTIST'S DREAM. FROM HARRIS'S MIRROR OF INTERPREDANCE.

BY PROP. E. E. EDWARDS. He trod the fairy land of Hope, The pilgrim of my dream; He roamed by many a sunny slope, By many a flashing stream. Bright was the scone around him then, Which dream-like rose to view; The placid take, the quiet glen, The mountains dim and blue, And glowing in the morning skies, Rose dome and palsee fair; A distant dream-and paradise, "A castle to the sir!"

The Tempter met him on his path, Disguised in robes of light, With all the guile a demon hath, To lure him from the right; And in the arts of rain skilled, Smiling he proffered him To cool his thirst, a goblet filled With poison to the brim. The victim seized the fatal bowl, And drained its contents dry, And as its fire scathed his soul, The fiend stood laughing by;

And muttered weirdly to himself, "The charm bath answered well, For never shall this hapless off Throw off my fatal spell." And domons then, with arching wings And eyes of lambent flame, Serpents and loathsome creeping things Unbidden round bim came. And while beneath the flends' control He vainly strove to rise, Coiled slowly round his sinking soul, "The worm that never dies."

What means that blood-stain florce and r What means that fevered glare? From eyes once bright the brightness fied, And Hope become Despair! He strove to cleanse that hated stain, Alas in vain he tried; A brother's blood-the brand of Cain-Was on him, and he died. How died he?-ah, fill up the blank, Add doom to hopeless doom; He sank with suicidal hand, Into a murderer's tomb.

And now a mourner crazed with woe, Her tearless vigil keeps. By that unballowed mound where low. Passion's poor victim sleeps. She brings a withered branch and sere, And casts it o'er his tomb, A symbol of a ruln drear, An emblem ofher doom. But boly Childhood drawing near

And what's your business? have you joined That self-denying temperance band Who shun the glass and aim their dread Destructive shafts at Bachus' head? Say are you striving to advance The glorious cause of temperance!-For conscience sake then gape your head And drop out that tobacco quid.

If you should chance to see me drink, A glass of brandy, you would think I was a vile degraded sot, A dirty scoundrel, would you not? Too mean, too fifthy, and too low, To ever claim respect from you; And then you'll turn around and squirt Your amber on your cambric shirt, Bedaub the carpet, or the floor Or smear it on the parlor door. While horrid splotches on your chin Betray the hideous mass within; Pray be consistent now, and rid

Your mouth of that tobacco quid. What good you manage to derive From chewing it, I can't contrive, I reckon you are not aware How you're regarded by the fair, You don't know how the ladtes pile Their epithets upon the vile Degrading practice, if you did

Now take the sober second thought, And seek the truth as I have sought. Let reason have her wonted sway And give to common sense fair play, And see if you can summon aught, To justify the foolish thought, That man on such a fifthy weed Was e'er designed by Heaven to feed. You seek in vain. Then for the sake Of decency this promise make, To never buy another plug But shun it as you would the jug, By a'l that's sacred just and wise, Accept this generous advice, Of one who does not eat the weed, Spit out that nasty, stinking quid. AIR-OR SUBANNAR! I had a dream the other night, When all around was still, I thought I saw my cottage white, Upon you flowery hill. The grass plot green before the door, The porch with vines o'ergrown, Were lovely as they were before, When all was yet my own. Oh, Rum-seller,

That home, that home of thine, That pleasant home, that he ppy hor That cottage home was mine.

The gravel walk so white and straight, With flowery banks beside, That led down to the wicket gute, Where Willie used to ride. The locus to o'er the path that grew, The willow boughs that swayed, All told me with a tale most true, That there my Mary played. Oh! Rumseller, &c.

The silver lake, so calm and clear, Along whose banks I've strayed So ofteniwith my Lucy dear, To watch the sunlight fade. The murmering stream that sweetly ran The garden's foot along, And sparkling fount, as bright as then, All sing the mournful song. Oh! Rumseller, &c.

In death her beart is bound: Her babes are sleeping on her brosst, Beneath you grassy mound; And I am wand'ring lone and strange, No master of my will:-My home, my happy home is changed. To a hut behind the Still. Oh! Rumseller, That home, that home of thine,

That pleasant home, that happy home,

That cottage home was mine!
