THE WISE THOUGHT. From Sketches of Irish Character by MRS. S. C. HALL.

A First Rate Irish Story. She was sitting under the shadow of a fragrant lime tree that overhung a very ancient well; and as the water fell into her pitcher, she was mingling with its music the tones of her "Jew's harp," the only instrument upon which Norah Clary had learned to play.

"Father dear father," said Norah, "suppose we were to say nothing about it good or bad and just pretend to take a sudden dislike to Morris, and let the priest speak to her himself, she'd come round."

"Out of sheer opposition to me, eh?" "Yes."

"And let her gain the day then?—that would be cowardly," replied the farmer drawing himself up. "No I won't."

"Father, dear, you don't understand," said the cunning lass, "sure ye're for Morris; and when we are,—that is if—I mean,—she continued, and luckily the twilight concealed her blushes—if that took place it you that will have yer own way."

"True for ye, Norry, my girl, true for you; I never thought of that before!" and pleased with the idea of tricking his wife, the old man capered for joy. "But stay a while—stay; aisy, aisy; he recommenced, 'how am I to manage?"

"Leave it to me, dear father—leave it only to me!" exclaimed the animated girl; "only pluck up a spirit, and whenever Morris's name is mentioned, abuse him—but not with all yer heart, father—only from the teeth out."

When they re-entered, the fresh-boiled potatoes sent a warm curling steam to the very rafters of the lofty kitchen; they were poured out in a large wicker dish, and on the top of the pile rested a plate of coarse white salt; noggins of buttermilk were filled on the dresser; and on a small round table a cloth was spread and some dell plates awaiting the more delicate repast which the farmer's wife was herself preparing.

"What's for supper, mother?" inquired Norah, as she drew her wheel towards her, and employed her fairy foot in whirling it round.

"Plaugy snipeens," she replied; "this 'obg chickens, that you've always such a fancy for. Barney Leary kilt them himself."

"So I did, said Barney, grinning; and that stick with a hook of Morris Donovan's is the finest thing in the world for knocking 'em down."

"If Morris Donovan's stick touched them, they shant come here," said the father, striking the poor little table such a blow with his clenched hand as to make not only but Mrs. Clary jump.

"And why so, pray?" asked the dame.

"Because nothing of Morris let alone Morris himself, shall come into the house," replied Clary; "he's not to my liking any how, and there's no good in his bothering here after that he won't get."

Excellent! thought Norah.

"Lord save us!" ejaculated Mrs. Clary, as she replaced the griddled snipes on the table, "what's come to the man?" Without heeding his resolution, she was proceeding to distribute the savoury birden when, to her astonishment, her usually tame husband threw the dish and its contents into the flames; the good woman stood aghast. The calm, however, was not of long duration. She soon rallied and commenced hostilities.

"How dare ye, ye spalpeen, throw away any o' God's mate after that fashion and I to the fore?" "What do ye mane, I say?"

"I mane, that nothing touched by Mor. Donovan shall come under this roof; and if I catch that girl of mine looking at the same side of the road that he walks on, I'll tear the eyes out o' her head, and send her to a nunnery!"

"You will? Or dare you say that to my face. to a child o' mine! And will ye will ye?—we'll see, my boy! I'll tell ye what, if I like, Morris Donovan shall come into this house; and what's more, be master of this house; and that's what you never had the heart to be yet, ye poor ould snail!"

So saying, Mrs. Clary endeavored to rescue from the fire the hissing remains of the burning snipes. Norah attempted to assist her mother; but Clary, lifting her up, somewhat after the fashion of an angel raising a golden wren with its claw, fairly put her out of the kitchen. This was the signal for fresh hostilities. Mrs. Clary stormed and stamped; and Mrs. Clary persisted in abusing not only Morris, but Morris' uncle, Father Donovan, until at last the farmer's helpmate swore, ay, and roundly too, by cross and saint, that, before the next sunset, Norah Clary should be Norah Donovan. I wish you could have seen Norry's eye dancing with joy and exultation, as it peeped through the latchhole; it sparkled more brightly than the richest diamond in our monarch's crown, for it was filled with hope and love.

The next morning before the sun was fully up, he was throwing his early beams over the glowing cheeks of Norah Clary; for her wise thought had prospered, and she was hastening to the trysting, where she generally met Morris Donovan. I don't know how it is but the moment the course of love runs smooth, it becomes very uninteresting, except to the parties concerned. So it is now left for me only to say, that the maiden, after a due and proper time consumed in teasing and tantalizing her intended, told him her saucy plan, and its result. And the lover hastened upon the wings of love, (which I beg my readers clearly to understand are swifter and stronger in Ireland than in any other country) to tell the priest of the arrangement, well knowing that his reverence loved his nephew and niece that was to be (to say nothing of the wedding supper, and profits arising therefrom) too well, not to aid their merry jest.

What bustle, what preparation, what dancing, gave the country folks enough to talk about during the happy Christmas holidays, I cannot describe. The bride of course looked lovely, and sheepish; and the bridegroom—but bridegrooms are always uninteresting. One fact, however, is worth recording. When Father Donovan concluded the ceremony, before the bridal kiss had passed, Farmer Clary without any reason that his wife could discover, most indecorously sprang up, seized a shillelah of stout oak, and whirling it rapidly over his head, shouted, "Carry me out! by the powers she's beat! we've won the day ould Ireland forever! Success, boys!—she's beat! she's beat!" The priest too, seemed vastly to enjoy this extemporaneous effusion, and even the bride laughed outright. Whether the good wife discovered the plot or not, I never heard; but of this I am certain, that the joyous Norah never had reason to repent her wise thought.

The subjoined letter which we copy from the N. O. Picayune of the 6th ult. gives a fearful picture of organized crime, and of depravity which sets all the laws of the land at defiance.

PADUCAH, Ky., July 23, 1845. It has lately come to light, that one of the most extensive and thoroughly organized bands of outlaws that have yet been banded together since the days of Murrell and his gang, have their haunts in the adjacent countries in Illinois where they rally forth to this State, and parts of Tennessee, Mississippi, and Missouri, upon the discovery of crime, and the gang leaders, murderers, counterfeiters and horse thieves, was the sudden disappearance of a man named Davis, who resided in Christian county, in this State—Two men arrived at Davis's house a few weeks ago, with a deed conveying to them the whole of his property, consisting of a farm, negroes and stock. They turned the family out of the farmstead, had the conveyance regularly recorded, and took quiet possession of the premises. The disappearance of Davis caused a widespread suspicion of foul play. The people of Christian county met in public assembly, and adopted resolutions designed to ferret out the mystery—they divided themselves into companies and several hundred persons, in small squads, are scouring the county on horseback, to secure the safety of the country.

A few days ago a party of citizens of Christian county took up a suspicious fellow, carried him to the woods, tied him to a tree, and threatened to whip him to death if he did not disclose to them the secret of Davis's absence. The man after protesting for a long time his ignorance of the subject, became alarmed for his life, and revealed the whole circumstances of his robbery and murder. It appeared that in making a short excursion from his house, he fell in with a man named Pennington (who is the gang leader) and one or two others of his party. Pennington first got Davis drunk; he then, by one dexterity or another, got him to sign a deed conveying to him his property as above mentioned. To prevent all trouble hereafter, Davis was dispatched, and his body hid away in a cave, and Pennington then took possession of his effects.

Before the recovery of the body of Davis, Pennington made his escape from Kentucky, and is said to be at the house of a member of his gang, named Young Linn, on the Illinois side of the river, six miles from a place opposite this place. Yesterday a small detachment of the Christian county patrol arrived here. They ascertained that a notorious member of the gang, a fellow named Gray, was at a little village in Illinois twelve miles below Paducah a number of the citizens volunteered to cross the river and assist in capturing Gray. This they effected, and last evening the party returned with the outlaw safely secured. Whilst I write, efforts are being made to raise a company of militia and effect the recovery of the body of Davis. The band have an extensive counterfeiting establishment in Pennington's vicinity, and have so laid the country immediately around under contributions, and have disposed themselves about in such an advantageous manner, as to make all expedition of the kind from another State, one of peril and doubtful success. It is to be hoped that the party will be made up, and that success will attend their public spirited enterprise.

The fellow who revealed the murder of Davis, gave in a list of some eighty persons, whom he named, and denounced as members of the gang. In scouring the country, the citizens have come to the knowledge of the preparation of many most diabolical acts by these men. These were generally committed in out-of-the-way places and obscure neighborhoods, where they might not have come to light but for the general excitement that now prevails in the counties above this town.

The contractors on the Illinois and Michigan canal advertise for 3,000 laborers.
