AMONG THE WAGE-WORKERS

Electricians Get Further Encouraging Convention News.

Several Unions Intend the Proscription of Korman's and Allen's Theaters—Eight-Hour Case.

A largely attended meeting of the Electrical Workers' Union, No. 26, was held last evening at Schwartz's Hall, No. 227 Seventh street northwest.

Communication from several unions throughout the country were read, stating that they indicated their intention of Washington as the place for holding the annual convention in November next. At the next regular meeting an election for delegates to the annual convention will be held.

A letter from Mr. Jordan, Ninth street, between E and F streets, was received, stating that in the future he would employ none but union men.

A special committee was appointed to wait on all the firms of the city doing electrical work and endeavor to induce them to employ union labor exclusively.

The reports from the committee on convention were very encouraging. The committee will meet again on Sunday next at 924 E street at 4 p. m.

Mr. George Niles was elected an honorary member.

Journalmen House Painters, L. A. 1798, K. of L., met in regular session last evening at Harris' Hall, corner Seventh and D streets northwest.

The committee on "unfair law" was instructed to communicate with all labor organizations throughout the country and solicit their aid in inducing all traveling troops to object to showing at Korman's theater until its differences with organized labor were settled.

One new member was initiated and three applications for membership were received. A resolution was passed that any member proven guilty of smoking non-union cigars was expelled.

A special meeting of the National Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees was held last night in their rooms at No. 1306 E street northwest, for the purpose of receiving applications of stage employees of

LIVES WERE IN DANGER

Judge Miller Sustained the Emergency Plea of McVaugh.

While Declaring That the Law Should Be Enforced, He Thought This an Exceptional Case.

The case against Frank McVaugh, sub-contractor for the iron work on the Government Printing Office addition, for violation of the eight-hour law, was dismissed by Judge Miller in the police court yesterday afternoon, as told in Tuesday's Morning Times.

The testimony of Lieut. Sewell and others was continued after The Evening Times report was concluded.

Judge Miller, in summing up the case, analyzed the statute under consideration, and said it was made by Congress, especially for the good of the working class of people, and he thought it a wise and beneficent law, and one that ought to be strictly enforced.

"The main question is," said his honor, "whether this man is a contractor or not, and I think from the testimony he is so made out."

"The only question remaining now is as to whether there was an emergency, and I have my views on that question. The only real meaning of this law is, where there is some real or apparent catastrophe, and that brings it down to a very narrow point, and so narrow, that there would be one case in a thousand where a man would not be liable within the limits of this law, if he worked his men over eight hours."

"Now the question is, whether this case comes under that head. If I were trying the Phoenix Iron Company, who seem to be the full cause of all the delay, they should have the full penalty of the law. But I have nothing to do with that. It is a question of what conditions the foreman of that gang of workmen was presented with on the day in question."
