REFUGE IN THE BEAR'S CAGE. Circus Man Who Was Pursued by Ne-groes He Had Deceived, roes He Had Deceived.

New York Sun.

"I was out with the red wag ons from 1870 until 1890," said an old circus mau,, "and during that time I traveled over all the different circuits in the South and West. There was one trip we made that I will never forget, and somewhere in the South there must be a few hundred negroes still alive who will never forget it either.

"It was back in '76, and we were running what is known as a steamboat circus. That is, we loaded all our paraphernalia on a is, we leaded all our paraphernalia on a steamboat and steamed down the Mississippi River, stopping at small towns, villages, hamlets, and even little settlements of four and five houses. In fact, we would make a landing at any point where there seemed to be any chance of a fair audience, and what money the show didn't get the shell and card men who accompanied us were sure to rope in.

We had a man with us named Mack, Aleck Mack. He was an old gold hunter and circus man, and knew the busness from we leaded all our paraphernalia on a

He could tumble, ride bareback, do a comic turn, swing on a trapeze or work the cards or shells like an expert, and, in fact, was an extraordinary man in every way and a useful man for a circus, as you can imagine. It was down in Louisiann, at a place called Bayon La Fouche the cards of the Footsman A cordial invitation to VERMONT AVENUE CHRISTIAN Church, pastor, F. D. He got a chank of iron ore out of the ballast box of the boat, covered it carefully He got a chunk of iron ore out of the ballast box of the boat, covered it carefully with a bit of spotless canvas, and when the begrees flocked about us at Bayon La Fourche, circulated a report among them that we had a marvelous loadstone aboard.

"It had come down from the beavens in the midst of a terrifo them."

that we had a marvelous loadstone aboard.

"It had come down from the beavens in the milst of a terrific storm a week before, he said, and had been picked up by the circus hands. Well, sir, you never saw such an excited lot of colored people in your life. A loadstone is full of luck in the mind of a Louisiana negro, and nothing would do but what they must see Mack's treasure. Well, we showed it to them, and they examined it with great reverence, and anapped at his offer to sell reverence, and anapped at his offer to sell when we foundly packed up and left we had about $500 of the people's money, which they had exchanged for bits of the ballast. We never found out how the negroes discovered the swindle, but they did, and a lot of them swore to have Mack's life.

"They followed the show for nearly two weeks, and the only way that we could insure Mack's safety was to put him in the bear eage every time we landed. The bears—were lanne enough, but entirely too friendly, and they made life miscrable for the poor man while they had him in the cage. We finally got out of the country and into
