From the Frederick-Town (Md.) Political Examiner.

ENGLISH VASSALS.

According to the "good old" feudal usage between liege lord and vassal, the emperor of Russia, king of Prussia and emperor of Germany have gone to London to pay their homage to the prince regent of England. I wish the Eighteenth had done homage to him before his departure for France. We only wish, as respects inferior and superior vassals to the English Crown in these United States, that they would go to England, bag and baggage, and cease their treacherous endeavors to make a British province of their native country.

Federal writers appear so intent on making Mr. Madison abdicate his power, that we are led to believe they want only a foreign force to compel him to that measure. Indeed, some persons have given pretty plain hints to that effect; and, as England seems disposed to furnish such auxiliary force we may expect shortly to see the mask entirely thrown aside; and their purposes more openly avowed.

"Let Mr. Madison make immediate peace, or abdicate his authority." This is the constant exclamation of Federal writers. "If the war must be continued," say they, "we are the proper persons to conduct it." For a specimen of the manner in which the war would be prosecuted, had they the ascendancy, we need only look to Maryland; here, where not even a democratic constable has been left in office; here, where their passions have had full scope for the last year or two, how have things been managed? have the British been driven from our shores? have the federal governor and council animated the people to defence by their example? where are their warlike preparations? alas! our governor is asleep—his council are revelling in government in the newspapers, and electioneering;—his friends are holding illegal and ridiculous discourses with the enemy. Such is the way with which the federalists fight the battles of their country. In the most federal counties of this state, where, according to federal authority, we should expect to find the best blood of the country, a few of the enemy have been permitted to commit their depredations unmolested—whole districts have been laid under contribution by small detachments of vagabonds; whilst the "best blood"—those men who have so often boasted of what they could do—have precipitately fled, and left their families and property to the mercy of the foe. And yet these are the creatures who have the audacity to talk of Mr. Madison's abdicating in their favor. That they would obtain for us peace, we do not doubt; but it would be such a one as honest Americans would blush to acknowledge—it would be a recognition.

From a knowledge of the federal patriotism in this state, we can easily conceive the defence which would be made by the general government, were federalists possessed of its control. The "unconditional submission" intimated in London prints, would probably be the least of our humiliation; chastisement for former disobedience and rebellion might be inflicted. That such treatment would gratify some factionists, we believe; else why so strenuously urge the virtue of restoring monarchs to (what they term) their "rightful claims?" why endeavor to impress upon the minds of the people the doctrine of perpetual allegiance? why speak in such raptures of kings and royalty? are not these things evidently intended to prepare the public mind for the wished-for change? how then could we possibly expect a vigorous defence of our liberties, from men who have linked themselves to the destroyers of all freedom! the crimes of faction require the care and interposition of the people; without a proper exertion of which, there is no safety.

When federal governors assume a neutrality, in a war constitutionally declared, it is time for the people to dispossess them of their power, and transfer it to those who will not thwart the measures of the national government. The neutral posture of this state, demands that men who are known not to be partial to the enemy, should preside over its destiny. Cowardice or treachery in rulers, is not likely to give permanent security to the governed.

ENGLISH THREATS.

We view them with firmness, but with caution. If the Americans remain but true to themselves, they can make graves for all the hordes of mercenary cut-throats that Britain may land on our shores; and that too within three months after their landing, at farthest. Let the energy of government and people increase with the crisis; trust to union and force, and confide in negotiation or speeches no longer. By cutting off their provisions, by every means; harassing them by light troops, and severing their lines of operations; we can at all times baffie all invaders. It was thus that Charles V. with his veteran army, was obliged by Montmorency (the ablest general of France in his day,) to retreat from Provence, where in two months, disease, hunger, and the sword, destroyed more than half of his troops. It was thus that Charles XII. and Napoleon the Great were, in different ages, driven from Russia, with ruin at their heels.

HONESTY THE BEST POLICY.

Should this country be invaded, the real Tories, (few in number we hope) will be placed in a twofold jeopardy; the English would take their property, and the Americans their lives.

To the Editor of the American Daily Advertiser, Mr. Poulson,

The following is a correct copy of the voluntary oath of allegiance to the United States administered to the celebrated M. Talleyrand, by the late Matthew Clarkson, Esquire, while Mayor of the city of Philadelphia.

"I Charles Maurice de Talleyrand Perigord, formerly administrator of the Department of Paris, son of Joseph Daniel de Talleyrand Perigord, a general in the armies of France, born at Paris, and arrived at Philadelphia from London, do swear, that I will be faithful, and bear true allegiance to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and to the United States of America, and that I will not, at any time, wilfully and knowingly do any matter or thing prejudicial to the freedom and independence thereof.

"Ch. Mau. de Talleyrand Perigord, sworn the 19th May, 1794, before

"MATTHEW CLARKSON, Mayor."
