SECOND AUSTRIAN BULLETIN. " Head Quarter, Frescatis, March 12. insert the preliminary dispositions made by the General Baron Frimont, to sur-

mont the obstacles, which presented themselves on entering the Abruzzi, and we hasten to the particulars which are most interesting.
"The advanced guard of the centre column under General Geppert, had orders to advance rapidly until it should meet a resistance, sufficiently vigorous to render it necessary to wait for the effect of the march of the centre column. " Our chasseurs fell in with the enemy at Cunetto, the entrance of which was barricadoed; but it was abandoned with out resistance. Before the village of Borghetto we found a bridge on the Veilino, This bridge, commanded by heights, whose successive summits might have favoured a brisk and murderous fire, was entrenched, and was capable of an easy defence. A regiment of light infantry was posted there. Our chasseurs advanced boldly. The enemy did not stand their ground, and a superior officer was wounded and made prisoner.

"The enemy, instead of retiring on Borghette, and thus defending the approaches to Antrodoco, threw himself into the mountains, whither he was pursued. We there saw the neighbouring heights covered with infantry; and some cannon fired from the castle of Antrodoco, made us believe that the enemy was there in force, and that he would defend a post which nature had rendered formidable. The movement of the column was slackened; to wait for the arrival of Major d'Aspre, and the effect of his attack. Meanwhile we exchanged some cannon shot with the fort of Antrodoco. We heard Major d'Aspre's fire, which was for some moments very, brisk. It was late, and the enemy profited of the night to escape into the mountains.— Maj. d'Aspre occupies the abandoned fort, and the advanced guard of the centre established posts in the town. We found three thirty six pounders and some ammunition in the tort.

" Major d'Aspre proceeded in his march at one in the morning of the 10th, and advanced towards Madona della Grotta. He found the road undefended, and one cannon in a bad emrench-ment which commanded the passage. "At day break, Lieut, Gee, Walmod, en moved forward; Lieut, Gen, Mohr marched the division of the Prince of Wied. At len in the morning, Gen. Villata descended the mountains of the Pas de Carno, bringing with him some officers and a hundred soldiers prisoners. This was a very fatiguing march-it tion of it, abaudon the Madona della Grotta.-A rapid march was then commenced on Aduila. Major d'Aspre, who, in consequence of his rapid movement, had, with his corps, become our advanc-ed guard, found the enemy at the post of St. Thomas: but they withdrew, after firing a few muskets, and abandoned two field pieces. At 7 in the evening he arrived before Aquila. A deputation from the town came to meet him, to inform him that it was evacuated, and to invite him to occupy it. He entered, re-ceiving from the inhabitants evident proofs of their joy at being delivered from the intolerable yoke of the undisciplined

"The commandant of the Castle of Aquila, an old officer, an invalid and faithful, opened the gates as soon as he received from Lieutenant General Baron Mohr, the assurance of the Austrian army did not make war on the Neapolitan people, and that it was acting according to the orders and intentions of his Ma-jesty the King of the Two Scollies. "On the 11th General Geppert, supported by the division of Walmoden, advanced towards Popoli, and the division of Wied encamped near Aquila. . Whilst these movements were being executed, Colonel Schneder advanced from Leonessa, to la Porta, and thence to Monte Real. In his march he met some enemies, dispersed them, and took some prisoners. On the 12th he marched on Tottea.

"The division of Stutterheim, posted at Tivoli, proceeded the 9th to Carsoli, attacked the hills, and one piece of cannon. Three battanons of infantry were detached from Riett by Colle Alto on Capara d'Osso and Carsolt with intent to favor the movement of the division of Stutterheim, and to follow the enemy on that road, by taking the direction of Sulmona; the rest of this division was to reinforce the main body of the army at Valmontore.

" The efforts of the disaffected, and of those misguided individuals, who imagined that submission to the authority of the king would lead to foreign subju gation, have failed in every quarter, and the Austrian armies have approached the capital, compelled to appear as enemies. which, in the first instance, their greatest anxiety was to act as friends .- Notwithstanding the resistance attempted, the torces of his Imperial and Royal Majesty are still disposed to return to their original intentions, under the conviction that the deluded will return to their duty, and that the loyal and well disposed inhabitants of these States will conduct themselves in such a manner as to merit their forbearance. The security of persons and property has already been offi-cially provided for. His Majesty the King, I feel authorised to announce, will soon restore himself to the bosom of his people, persuaded that the affection to his person and family has not been dimenished by the calamitous events that have occurred within the last two months .... His Majesty's anxiety has been, and ever will continue to be, the liberty, prosperity, and security of all his antifects.

FLORENCE, March 17, -After the pub lication of the Gazette of this day, we have received from Rome, dated the 15th, the following news, which appears to us of the greatest importance : " On the evening of the 11th, three despatches arrived at Naples to his Royal Highness the Duke of Calabria. The first, coming from the Abruzzi, announced that Gen. Pepe had been abandoned by his troops after his first rencontre with the Austrians; the second, that at Gaeta the army had revolted against Gen. Begany; the third brought a request to his Royal Highness from Gen. Carascosa to proceed immediately to A verso in order that he might have an interview with him. His Royal Highness thought it better instead of going himself to send Gen. Fardella, with the Minister of War. On the 12th, these two personages returned to the capital; and after having explained the state of things, the parliament assembled, and ordered the Dake of Calabria to address a message to the King in the name of the assembly, to declare their respect and submission to his Majesty.

It is said that if the Queen had gone to the Drawing Room, her Majesty would in the first instance have been shown into an anti-room, when the King, accompanied by some of his Ministers, would have given her an audience; after which her Majesty would have been received at court in the usual manner. We give this erely as a rumor circulated in a very igh quarter; we can add, from our own nowledge, that her Majesty was expectat the gates of the Palace with the onors usually paid to the Royal Family.

the passage of the Corno, has sent home expenditure incurred by this country for believed that no account of that expenditure had been published since Bonaparte was first sent to St. Helena .... Upon the propriety of Napoleon's detention, he meant at this moment to say nothing, the present object being merely to ascertain the expense of detaining him, and upon whom it devolved. Whatever opinions might prevail on the subject of his being detained in custody, in the present financial difficulties of this country, it might become a subject of very serious consideration, how far England should have to pay the whole, or a great part of an ex-penditure, arising solely out of that de-tention. [Hear.] The house would judge of the subject, when he stated the fellowing items as forming a part of the expense of Bonaparte's detention: For stall slope, there was an expenditure of nearly £24,000; for military establishment, £193,000; other incidental and contingent expenses at the Longwood estab-lishment, £57,000; vessels for provisioning the island, exclusive of the many this charge he had heard estimated at £3,900 £4,000 or £5,000; naval expenses of one 74 gun skip and nine smaller vessels, £ 160,000; making a total considerably exceeding £400,000 per annum for the sole purpose of keeping Bonaparte a prisoner. [Hear, hear.] The hon, mem; ber, after moving for these accounts, said that Government had hitherto laid no accounts of this expenditure on the table of Parliament; and he thought it quite time, now in the Blir or 7th year of peace, that not only these accounts should be forthcoming, but also that it should be known whether there was any secret un-derstanding with other powers, and to what extent, for meeting the expense.

BRITISH PARLIAMENT. Catholic Question.—The long aritated Ca-tholic question new engrosses the attention of the British Parliament and British editors.

The hill has passed the House of Commons, by a majority of 19, and has received its first reading in the House of Lords. The Globe says that " ministers do not mean to arrivally resist it in the Lords, because if opposed there successfully, it would be brought forward again in the Commons, and would thus bring the two Houses constantly into collision on this great national question." But the Courier, on the contrary, says, "the measure has now to fight its way through the House of Lords, where it is expected to encounter a more deviced to the counter as more deviced." There is evidently much cisive opposition." There is evidently much feeling and d good deal of alarm, in regard to this subject, and the parties are completely split up upon it. The Courier opposes the bill, and lord Castlereagh supports it. The Times and True Briton, (apposition papers,) are opposed to it, and the New Times, [Minuserial,] is in favor of it. Many apprehend that it will not only have the effect to injure the established church in England, but utterly extinguish it in frebud; while the more tolerant consider the present bill as a kind of compromise, and feel a disposition to put the matter at rest, by letting the catholics have a part of what they have claimed, and enough, so they suppose, to satisfy them. The Courier says, the most alarming part of the whole transction, is, the change of shape which this bill has undergone in its "Naples, March 20, 1821."
