A MILLICNAIRE'S SUDDEN SUMMONS. Death Came to Him at His Office in New York City. Charles Pratt, the millionaire oil merchant and philanthropist, who died suddenly in his office on Broadway, New York, a short time ago, was probably the wealthiest resident of Brooklyn, his fortune being estimated at $20,000,000. He was a very generous man and gave largely to the Emman-uel Baptist church, which he founded, and to the Adelphi academy, of whose board of trustees he was president. He founded and endowed the Pratt institute, a manual training school fer boys and girls, which cost him $1,500,000. His last business act was to sign a check for $5,000 for the aid of the Brooklyn Bureau of Charities. Mr. Pratt was president of the Pratt

Manufacturing company and vice president of the Standard Oil company. He was born in Wilbra-ham, Mass., Oct. 2, 1830. His father was a hard working cabinet maker, who had all he could do to bring up his family of ten children. Young Pratt was early thrown upon his own resources At the age of ten he went to work upon a farm near Boston. Afterward he learned the trade of a machinist, and earned enough money to give him a year's tuition at the Wilbraham academy. When nineteen he entered the employ of an oil and paint firm in Boston, and laid the foundation of his commercial career. In 1850 he went to New York and engaged in the same business. Seven years later, after a remarkable measure of success, he established the firm of Charles Pratt & Co., which was subsequently merged into the Standard Oil company.

The Pratt institute is one of the great educational enterprises of the country. It combines the best features of the Cooper Union classes, the leading manual training schools, cooking schools, art schools and classes in domestic economy. Mr. Pratt left a widow and eight children—six sons and two daughters.

Trout and Turkey in West Virginia. Camping along some stream, or occupying a rude cabin with a hospitable native, you have but to listen, just at dawn, to hear the early calls of the turkeys, still on their roosts. Then if you are not skillful enough to either steal within gunshot or call some proud gobbler, by well dissembled turkey call, near enough to lay him low, you have no business to be where such sport awaits you. Brook trout and wild turkey in combination are worth all the trouble it takes to get where they are. Snipe shooting is the earliest sport in the line of gunning the country has, except the shooting of wild fowl on their flight from the southern feeding places, and that has come to be but little better than fugi-tive sport nowadays. English snipe are easily next to woodcock in wariness and capriciousness of flight, and being well distributed over the country, wherever marshy or boggy land provides them with a field for sustenance, shooting them is a popular sport. These birds begin their flight northward in March and sometimes earlier, and a hunter with a good gun and, equally important, a good dog finds snipe shooting in April and May a particularly enlivening sport. But all early spring outdoor sports are so much at the caprice of the weather at that changeable and uncertain time of year that their popularity must necessarily depend more on the ability of the sports man to withstand discomfort and frequently hardship than it does on the excitement of the sport itself.

The Priceless Wine of Bremen.

It sounds like the most monstrous exaggeration to say that a wine exists of which a single glass is worth $500,000, yet that is the fabulous value at which the ancient Rudesheimer of Bremen is appraised. Only one large cask of this precious beverage, which dates from 1658, remains. It is never sold, but on presentation of a doctor's cer-tificate the sick of Bremen are allowed a small quantity. Three persons only have been honored by gifts of tiny bottles of the rare beverage—Emperor William I, his son Frederick and Prince Bismarck. The wine resembles dark beer in color, while the taste is hard and the aroma peculiar.

"The constituency of the seminary," says Dr. Mackenzie, "represents the people on the Pacific coast from the Canadian boundary to San Diego."

The Plan to Make Paris a Scaport. The proposal to make Paris practically a seaport is about to assume the actual form of an undertaking. In order that ocean vessels may reach the French capital it is planned to deepen the channel of the Seine from Rouen to Paris about twenty feet, and to cut canals at the chords of two great bends of the Seine, reducing the dis-tance between Rouen and Paris to 112 miles. The Paris port would be somewhere between St. Denis and Clichy, while five intermediate ports would be made from Rouen to the capital. At present the cost is estimated at $30,000,000.

A Very Small Farming Area. Some interesting facts regarding New Mexico are contained in a census bulletin recently issued. It appears that crops were raised by irrigation in the year ending June 30, 1890, on 91,745 acres, or 143.35 square miles, a little more than one-tenth of 1 per cent. of the entire area of the territory. The aggregate number of farms was 4,174 (not including those of the Pueblo Indians), and of these 3,085, or nearly three-fourths, depended upon irrigation.

When Sancho set up as governor of when sancho set up as governor of the island he displayed some love of money which caused the duchess of the realm to say of him: "The discovery of his avarice was a misfortune, and I did not intend him to be a gold hunter, for avarice bursts the sack and the covetous governor deals ungoverned justice."

It is well to be hopeful and full of resources, so that the disappointments of fortune may not utterly dismay one.
