MORAN KILLED GILLIGAN.

That Briefly Was the Conclusion Coroner's Jury Arrived at After Listening to a Great Deal of Testimony Last Night.

Dr. John T. McGrath, deputy coroner, concluded the inquest in the Gilligan case last night. The jury simply found that Thomas Gilligan came to his death from knife wounds inflicted by Edward Moran. The self-defense feature of the case was discussed at length by the jury, but it would not venture to incorporate in its verdict anything expressive of its sentiments on the subject, deeming it best to leave that to a quarter sessions jury.

The testimony added little to the story told in Monday's Tribune. Patrolman Saltry's evidence was similar in every respect to his statement made to a Tribune reporter Sunday.

In answer to questions by Attorney Joseph O'Brien, of O'Brien & Kelly, who with Hon. J. C. Vaughan have been retained as Moran's lawyers, the officer stated that he does not remember that Gilligan at any time told who stabbed him. It was also elicited that there were cuts and abrasions on Moran's head that were evidently made by some blunt instrument. Gilligan was a man of large size, standing nearly six feet in height and weighing between 150 and 160 pounds. Moran would measure about 5 feet 8 inches and weigh between 150 and 160 pounds, according to the witness' estimate.

Michael McGuire saw the affair from beginning to end. Gilligan assaulted Moran first, according to the witness' version.

George McLaughlin, who was with Moran when Gilligan came up with him, told a story similar in substance to that related by the preceding witnesses. In answer to Mr. O'Brien's question the witness stated that Gilligan complained only of the stab in his arm when he jumped back after the scuffle on the corner.

Jarvis Saltry, who witnessed a part of the affair, told of what he had seen but threw no new light on the matter. Miss Margaret Flood, the last witness, after describing how she had been summoned to the scene by Mrs. Moran told that she arrived just after the first scuffle and throwing her arms around Gilligan from behind drew him away and coaxed him to accompany her home. He went a few steps, she says, when he heard somebody say something—what it was or who said it she does not know—and tearing away from her he picked up a stone and threw it in Moran's direction. She did not see much of what followed.

Dr. McGrath explained the nature of the wound after which the jury retired. The verdict was rendered after about half an hour's deliberation.

Gilligan's funeral occurred yesterday afternoon and was largely attended. Services were held at Holy Rosary church and interment was made in the Mt. Carmel cemetery, Dunmore.

Two lady representatives of the house of D. McCarthy & Sons, of Syracuse, are at Hotel Jernyn, displaying some beautiful costumes, wraps and fabrics of this Fall's importation, which the ladies of Scranton are invited to inspect today and tomorrow. "It has always been Mr. McCarthy's aim to bring home such gowns as would best show the typical Parisian styles, and not only the dresses but the evening wraps, jackets and capes shown are just what are worn in Paris."—Syracuse Standard.

Much praise is due D. McCarthy & Sons through whose efforts the ladies of Syracuse receive truly metropolitan advantages in the matter of style."—Syracuse Herald.
