BASEBALL : ROWING : SHOOTING : TROTTING RUBE A COME-ON

FOR NATIONALS Gave Up Hits Enough to

COSTLY ERROR BY KNIGHT

Win in Eighth.

Started Proceedings by Which Washington Snatched Victory From Athletics-Everybody Swatted.

Washington, 6; Athletics, 3. A pleasant afternoon was spent, thank

The affair did not take place in a drawing room. Oh, no; it took place at the Seventh street butchery, and 2,002 gleeful fanatics chortled with joy while the Nationals slaughtered the Athletics and the inimitable Rube Waddell. While St. Louis lost to Chicago, and was more firmly fastened in the American League's bottom pen, the nifty Na-tionals were thirsting for gore. After, having been apparently beaten, they stuck a knife in Rube Waddell, and bled him for a double, three singles, and a trie of bases on balls, which netted the grand total of six healthful runs, and to the victory-mad fellows who sit in the sun and bellow, the Athletics' three in a water bucket. A Gloomy Knight.

School Boy Wonder Knight, the pride of the leather-lunged Philadelphia sports, started said slaughter by failing to stab Waddell's delivery to prevent Townsend from reaching the second pen. This direful calamity grated on the Rube's nerves, and he either be-came rattled or developed a yellow streak. Possibly he did neither; it may have been that the Nationals shined their orbs and spied the combination to his foolery. At any rate the shoots he shied up to the home folk served to boost local batting averages.

Jack Townsend started the doings that crought joy to the fans in the eighth. He planted a hard single to right. Nill He planted a hard single to right. Nill bumped an easy grounder to Waddell. A double play was imminent, but Knight dropped Rube's heave to catch Townsend, and all hands were safe. Townsend, and all hands were safe. Then Jones knocked the seams off the globule and Townsend trotted home. Ecrn Manager Stahl sacrificed the runners up a station and Punch Knoll lent a helping hand in the shape of a stinging two-spot that sped over Hoffman's head, and Nill and Jones crossed the

As the crews went under the bridge a Cornell victory was assured, and bareheaded hundreds of Cornell men stood and chanted their anthems. From this point on the interest was centered in the struggle for second place. Try as they would the Syracusans, the winas they would the Syracusans, the winners last season, could not shake off the Washington men, who were but half a length back. Columbia and Penn were a little behind, fighting it out between the behind, fighting it out between the behind, fighting it out between the behind half a length back. race, were reeling on their stretchers, and were unable to go the clip. Little Shriver spiashed water into their faces, and they revived momentarily, but they had rowed their race, and as Syracuse crossed the line it had an advantage of a length on Georgetown. Columbia came fast in the last mile, and was but half a length behind Georgetown, beating Pennsylvania by about 100 feet. Wisconsin finished in the ruck, lengths behind the Quakers.

After the race Georgetown men divided honors with the Cornell heroes, and on all sides great satisfaction was expressed at the fine showing made by the Blue and Gray.
