She is beautiful as the Jewish women frequently are beautiful, with fine dark eyes, softly blooming color, and hair like burnished copper, which she wears low, in a classic knot at the nape of the neck. It is a style that needs no elaborate costuming, and the dozen or so simple gowns which make up her trousseau will be quite sufficient setting for it.

The young couple are to spend their honeymoon in Europe. They sail on the White Star liner, Cedric, for London, and it is said will first of all visit the Ghetto there, where Rose Pastor's childhood was spent.

Reports have come from he other side that the Ghetto is prepared to give them welcome—most royal welcome after its fashion, which may not exactly appeal to the young people. To be sume, not one of Rose Pastor's old neighbors is there now to give her greeting, but those who have succeeded them seem to feel it is up to them to do the thing properly, according to their lights.

New York.

The marriage will be the culmination of the second romance of the University Settlement in which the present generation of the Phelps Stokes has played a leading part. Two years ago last month Caroline Phelps Stokes married Robert Hunter, an Indiana man who, about a year before, had come from Chicago to take charge of the University Settlement, down at Eldridge and Rivington streets.

take charge of the University Settlement, down at Eidridge and Rivington streets.

But the attention that that marriage attracted was not to be compared with that occasioned by the announcement of the Stokes-Pastor engagement. For after all, Mr. Hunter was of the Stokes social condition, if not of the Stokes financial condition. He was a university man, who had made sociology and economics a special study, and achieved considerable reputation along his own lines, a man thoroughly familiar with the usages of that socity in which Miss Stokes moved, when it suited her to move in society at all.

Moreover, he was not only of the same faith, but even of the same denomination as his bride. One of her brothers was an Episcopal elergyman, one of his had studied for the ministry and been obliged to give it up when his father's sudden death had left the family affairs in such shape as to require the eldest scor's attention.

sudden death had left the family affairs in such shape as to require the eldest son's attention.

But Rose Pasior is of Russian-Hebrew family Her childhood was spent in the poverty of the London Ghetto; her girlhood on the benches of a small cigar factory; her young womanhood as a settlement worker, and increasingly as a writer for Jewish periodicals.

And yet when James G. Pheips Stokes announced his intention of marrying her, Phelps Stokes pater and mater, at that time traveling abroad, cabled him their warmest congratulations, sent "love to Rose," and asked when it was to be, that they might surely be on hand.

It was her people who objected. Not her immediate family, but her race and nationality, the rabbis of her faith. They were not slow to disapprove. They are sure no good will come of it.
They do not believe in the possibility of a happy marriage between Hebrew and Christian; and they have made Miss Pastor the subject of prayer and preaching. Nor has her selection of her prospective brother-in-law to perform the ceremony at all softened their disapproval.

But after all, as a friend of the famil "Aren't the Hebrews in luck? Haven't they reason to be satisfied? Think of the marriages the children of some of our millionaires have been making—the daughters marrying penniless and profligate noblemen, the sons running around after and getting mixed up in scandals with all sorts of stage adventuresses. Who wouldn't prefer as a son-in-law a clean decent American, who had earned respect and consideration and a fair income in the career which he marked out for himself? Or as a daughter-in-law a girl whose character seems to be beyond reproach, who has studied and worked and raised herself far above the condition she was born into, and whose praises are on the lips of all who know her?

"I think myself the Stokeses are in luck. I don't see any reason why they should not have sent that love to Rose and congratulated their son very sindered."
