DEMOCRATS DEMAND BALLINGER REPORT

Squabble Over Secretary of Interior Is Taken Up at St. Paul.

They may save the situation in the majority report, but can hardly prevent its being published, with the minority report, before the fall elections.

Senator Nelson said today:

"There is no warrant for showing a division in the committee. I don't know how the other members stand and they don't know how I stand. Whether they will make a final report without Senators Root and Flint, I cannot say. Not any one of the committee has expressed a view. I do not believe that a single one of them knows what the other thinks.

The Final Boot.

The story goes that Senator Nelson and other members of the Administration faction have been expecting Gifford Pinchot to be incontinently thrown out of the conservation congress by the combination of Western governors and their friends. When Pinchot was thus being kicked through the exit, the Pinchot-Ballinger investigating committee would give him the final boot by a report exonerating Ballinge rand castigating Pinchot.

The most interesting address of the day was delivered by W. W. Pinley, president of the Southern Railway. He said:

Mr. Finley said:

The interest of the railways of the South in conservation and the interest of the people of the South in conservation are identical.

I will go farther, and state my unqualified conviction that any economic servative use of a raw material, whatthrough all the stages of preparation for the final consumer. Manufacturing in the South has reached its present ped on the basis of this kind of conservation of raw material. Industrial development in the South on a large scale may be said to date from about 1880, prior to which time only relatively a small proportion of the raw materials available in that section were advanced through even the first stages of manufacture before being shipped to other localities. A large proportion of Southern cotton mill products, lumber, pig iron, and other commodities, advanced through the first stages of manufacture, are still shipped out of the South to serve as the raw materials of industries in other localities which convert them into articles ready for the final consinter, and Southern coal is shipped to betwee as the raw material for power and heat in other parts of the United that it is not parts of the United that the parts of the United through even the first stages of manu-

Forest Conservation.

As the timber consumption of the United States is now in excess of the anual growth, and as other sections we drawing on our Southern forests, it is elevious that if these Southern wood-working industries are to survive and are to be handed down to future gen-erations immediate and effective steps should be taken for the conservation of Southern forests. This is the more important for the reason that the same steps taken to insure a perpetual supply of raw material for our woodworkers will tend to stream and soil workers will tend to stream and soil conservation by increasing stream flow in periods of drought and by lessening the destructiveness of floods which crode the soil of the upper watersheds and deporit gravel and silt on overflowed lands and in the beds of the navigable parts of the streams.

Power of Government.

It may be that our Federal Govern tion to acquire lands for the purpose of forest conservation, but it is charged forest conservation, but it is charged with the supervision improvement, and conservation of our navigable streams, and the evidence as to the effect of forests on stream flow was so conclusive as to lead the House of Representatives, during the last session of Congress, to pass a bill providing for the establishment of national forests for the protection of the watersheds of navigable streams. This bill is to be voted on in the Senate on the 15th of next February. Whether this plan or some other may be adopted, I think it is of the utmost importance that the campaign of education as to the necessity for the speedy and general adoption of the most approved methods of scientific forestry, which is being so ably carried on by the National Forest Service, should be continued.

Senator La Follette is not yet out of the woods, for although he has won the Republican nomination for the Senate, it is believed that in the election he will be described by large numbers of standpat Republicans. Whether this defection will be sufficient to bring about it defeat is a matter of speculation, but members of the Ballinger-Pinchot investigatigating committee are holding up a pro-Ballinger report declared to have been decided on a wek ago.

The Secretary's friends on the committee find themselves in the minority. Senator Root, Senator Flint, and kepresentative Olmstead being absent from the session here.

Although returns are not completed, early today, it is generally believed later figures will not change the above results.
