No. 10

What Would it Cost the U. S. to Manufacture its Own Armor?

To the Members of Congress: The whole argument for a Government armor plant rests upon the contention that through Government manufacture a cheaper price will be realized.

We concede that if we cannot do better for the Government than it can do for itself, our case fails.

The Secretary of the Navy in his Annual Report estimates that the Government can make armor at $262.79 per ton in a plant of 10,000 tons running at full capacity. The prevailing price is $425 a ton. He estimates the difference as the advantage of Government over private manufacture. The estimate is absolutely fallacious.

The Secretary's estimate covers mere shop work; it omits many important items which must enter into actual cost.

SECRETARY DANIELS' ESTIMATE MAKES NO PROVISION

- For Administration and General Expense, For Insurance, Taxes and Depreciation of Plant, For Interest on Investment and Working Capital.

These items must be paid in one way or another by either Government or private manufacturer.

Secretary Daniels' estimate assumes that the Government plant will be run at full capacity. The award of a contract large enough to keep any plant running full would make possible equally great if not greater economies in a private plant.

We can and will manufacture armor at a price cheaper than the Government can possibly do it.

The building of a Government plant— Would not reduce the price of armor to the people; but it Would reduce the available capacity for producing this vital factor in national defense.

We are prepared to produce armor at the Government's own price. This is not a mere phrase; it is a responsible business proposition. Acceptance of it will save the Government money.
