

AMONG US MORTALS

MEN'S WEAR
IN WASHINGTON

Drawn by W. E. HILL

He walks down to the Treasury every day and has to have something closefitting and warm.

The open season for trench coats on F street.

The newlyweds from Rockville: "Oh, Harry, this is fear! It looks sweet cocked up on one side."

Head of the department, who has been with the firm twenty-five years and doesn't care much for the Xmas help.

A clerk in a southeast store says girls always pick out just the wrong thing in ties for their brothers' Christmas gifts.

Loss of attention by clerk in haberdashery when customer who came in for a collar button declines to get interested in something neat in neckwear.

The Xmas rush—Salesman to tailor: "I tell him I wouldn't touch the sleeves. They'll work up after he wears it awhile, And as for the shoulders—they're perfect." The head tailor agrees.

Very exclusive clerks waiting for the customer to make the opening advances to be waited on.