THE NATIONAL ERA. WASHINGTON, D. C., NOVEMBER 14, 1850.

VOL IV.

THE WAR DISTRICT.

We trust the Secretary of War will make a proper arrangement with Major-General Scott, respecting the different stations in the war district. The Secretary is aware of the necessity of providing for the comfort of the troops stationed in various parts of the country, and will no doubt be quick to act in concert with the commanding officer. The troops are encamped, and the necessary stores of provisions and ordnance are on the march. The Secretary is perfectly aware of the expense of maintaining the troops, and will no doubt provide for their comfort.

PRESIDENTIAL CONSIDERATIONS.

The district now call of the States of the Southern and Northern United States is in a state of great excitement. The Southern States are anxious to elect a President who will support the principles of the Constitution, and who will be able to carry into effect the laws of the land. The Northern States are equally anxious to elect a President who will support the principles of the Constitution, and who will be able to carry into effect the laws of the land. The President-elect must be able to carry into effect the laws of the land.

THE CONFEDERATE.

We are glad to learn that the Secretary of War is about to set out on a tour of inspection, to visit the different stations in the war district. The Secretary is aware of the necessity of providing for the comfort of the troops stationed in various parts of the country, and will no doubt be quick to act in concert with the commanding officer. The troops are encamped, and the necessary stores of provisions and ordnance are on the march. The Secretary is perfectly aware of the expense of maintaining the troops, and will no doubt provide for their comfort.

A GREAT DISCOURSE.

The following discourse was made by one of our leading abolitionists, at a meeting in New York, on the 14th of October, entitled "The Rights of Man." The author of the discourse is seen to have made a marked advance in his arguments, and has taken the ground that the rights of man are not to be limited by the laws of the country. He has also taken the ground that the rights of man are not to be limited by the laws of the country.

LITURGICAL NOTES.

The following notes were taken by one of our leading abolitionists, at a meeting in New York, on the 14th of October, entitled "The Rights of Man." The author of the notes is seen to have made a marked advance in his arguments, and has taken the ground that the rights of man are not to be limited by the laws of the country. He has also taken the ground that the rights of man are not to be limited by the laws of the country.