A little child might well confound, With almost perfect cases The wisest man, though quite profound, By questions such as these:

First, tell across what river lies That famous work, the Bridge of Sighs ? Then answer, the bardest of things. From whence descends the reign of kings ? Pray give the weight, and from what stack, "The straw that broke the camel's back ?"

How large a broom ought there to be To sweep a storm across the sea? Now name the tree, and tell bow high, That bore "the apple of the eye !"

Who has ever wished or sought To ride upon a train of thought? Upon what sea and at what rate Sails that proud, haughty Ship of State ?

Upon whose tender face appears Wrapped this weary vale of tears? To what ocean and through what clime Flows that non-ending river, Time?

SENATOR BECK'S RIDE.

DON'T remember just what year it was," Mr. Beck said, "but it was before I came to Congress, when I was quite a young man, that I was in New York city. t was in the days when the old Bloomingdale road was a favorite drive of New Yorkers with fast horses. Now, I like fast horses myself, and I thought I had ridden behind some. One afternoon I was up town, or what was at that time up town in New York, and a gentleman came along whom I knew. His name was Capt. Notris. He was driving a dreadful body and angular-looking mare, and when he asked me if I would like to take a seat beside him, I was almost ashamed to get in behind such a specimen of horse flesh .-Still I knew Capt. Norris was something of a lover of horses, and besides I couldn't in courtesy refuse him. So I got in. The sleepy-seeming old mare jogged along in a most tiresome way. Her head hung down, and it seemed as though it was all she could do to drag her legs along.

"We'll go up on the Bloomingdale road if you don't mind," said the captain, "and see somo of the steppers." "Well, that would be pleasant enough, for I thought I would have a chance to see a brush or two between some of the noted horses of New York of that day. I said to the captain that I almost wondered why he wasn't out with a stepper himself, knowing how fond he was of fast driving. He said that he sometimes did take a fast horse out, and I remember looking at the dingy, bony mare, and feeling for the captain some of the shame which I thought he ought to have felt for himself. I noticed, too, that the people whom we passed, who recognized him were staring at his mare, and I thought they were wondering how it was that Capt. Nor-

"By and by a noble animal passed us. The gentleman who was driving he passed, around at the Captain. I noticed that the Captain nodded, and that he took a little firmer grip of the reins. The gentleman slowed up a little, sufficiently to let us

"Try it, Cap," he shouted.

The Captain nodded. "I saw the mare lift her head a little as the grip and the reins tightened, and put some little animation into her feet. By and by we heard the clatter of hoofs back of us. I looked around and saw that the gentleman was coming at a splendid pace.

"See if he passes us," said the Captain, and he made one chirrup to the mare. "Gentlemen, I have seen transformation. have seen the old man in the opera of Faust' changed in an instant to the handsome young fellow. I have seen a politician change his coat, but I never saw such a transformation as then happened. The mare lifted head. Her cars no longer hung limp. They were creet and tossed back to catch the sound of those approaching hoofs. Her dingy body now sammed to gleam, and her legs looked like the spokes of a rapidly-revolving wheel. She was all fire, all animation, all electricity. I could think of nothing but a locomotive rushing along at the rate of a mile a minute. Heavens, how the wind cut my face!

"Look out for your hat, Beck," said the Captain, and I pulled it down over my ears. I glanced quickly at the Captain. He held the reins firmly and his eyes were fixed ahead. We were plunged ahead on a whirlwind. I thought what a beauty that mare now is, and I thought there was only one end of it all-annihilation. I grabbed the The constitutionality of the smendment to seat firmly with both hands, and I pressed my feet against the dashboard. The wind moaned in my ears, although we made the brecze ourselves, I could hardly breathe, I could not see, except away shead. I knew we passed team after team, and I heard the people cheer. I shut my eyes. I thought the crash would come. I would have begged the Captain to stop; if the speed had not been so great that speech was impossible. I said to myself, James Beck, your day has come. Whew www! How we were flying! There was no motion excepting speed. were flying over the road, horses and riders, scemingly impelled by an unseen, irresistible power. I opened my eyes once and saw some men away ahead waving their hats. In an instant we had reached and passed them, and as we went by, the three men mingled into one. When will this end? I wondered. The suspense was awful. I wanted whatever was going to happen to happen at once. It seemed as though we had been an hour riding, when the speed slackened, slower and slower, and at last the mare stopped. I opened my eyes and saw that we were standing at a roadside inn.

"Are you through, Captain? I tremblingly asked. "Yes," he said, laughing; "let's take s little Sata Cruz " "The Captain turned the mare over to a hostler, and went inside and I helped myself liberally.

"Captain, you gave me a great fright," I "I had no idea that mare could go. said. Why she's fit to be a racer." "Yes, don't know but she is," said the

"How long were we coming down here?"

"About eight minutes," "How far is it?"

"About four miles." Here a man touched me and drew me aside. "Dou't you know that mare, man?" he asked. "No."

"That's Lady Suffolk."

"The fastest mare of her day," said Sentor Butler. "Yes," replied I.

By and by we started home, and as we met the team that had at first passed us, and which we subsequently passed on the lightning's wings, then I knew why everybody stared at the more."

New Orleans, May 11th, Jefferson Davis, re-ferring to Gen. Jackson, said: "From the academic shades of the military institute his went forth to battle for the cause of State rights, self-government and constitutional liberty. Nobody expected that this quiet professor would have an opportunity to show the great qualities he possessed and become the great hero of our war. To-day he stands in the opinion of Europeans, so far as I know it, the mightiest chieftain of the Confederate cause. This silent professor constantly rose like a meteor over the battlefield of the Confederacy-only like a meteor in its brightness-for his light was steady as the orb of day. It shone to the very close, increasing in brilliancy and in the trust which the people reposed upon it. Such was Jackson. He lived for his country, nover doubting the justice of his cause, believing it was rightcous; and trusting in it he died, as I live to-day, feeling that the Confederacy ought to have succeeded, beeause it was founded on truth and justice .-He gave his life for the whole country, and the country gave its beart to Jackson. the men upon whom he leaned in the hour of danger, in honoring him also honor yourselves.

At a special term of the Circuit Court of Page county, held on Saturday last by Judge Turner, the sale of the Luray Cavorns by S. A. Buracker and Wm. Biedler to the Luray Hotel & Cave Co., was confirmed by consent of parties and possession immediately delivered up to Robert R. Corson, Esq., one of the directors of said company, who is now in charge of the same. Preparations are already in progress for the introduction of electric lights, which have been specially designed and contrived by Mr. Edison in person. Under this improved method of illumination, these Caverns will doubtless appear inconceivably grand, and will have no parallel, perhaps, in the world's range of natural wonders, when the contemplated improvements are completed.
