"A cup for love!" how low, soft the words; and all the while blush was rippling with a smile, Like summer after snow.

"A cup for memory!"
cup that one must drain alone;
le autumn winds are up and moar
Across the barren sea.

Hope, Memory, Love: Hope for fair fair morn, and love for day, And memory for the evening gray, And solitary dove.

For the Middletown Transcript HAIL AND ITS RATIONALE.

Moist air is vulgarly called heavy, whereas its tendency is to ascend, except when it ceases to exist as air and assumes the form of water or ice. In proportion as air is mingled with vapor of water it is consequently disposed to ascend, but like the flat surface of a wide board at the bottom of an access of water it ascends were tom of an ocean of water, it ascends very slowly, unless one end of the board is ele-vated so that it may approach the surface "end foremost," instead of its broadside. In that case, as everybody has noticed, is projected much above the surface by the accumulated momentum or motion and relative weight.

Man lives at the bottom of an ærial ocean, or ocean of air, 45 miles deep, and a "flat board" or stratum of vapor of water constantly ocvers and spreads out in his atmosphere, powerfully disposed to ascend but held down to the surface of the earth by a weight of air above equal to about thirty-six tous on the roof of every house that covers a lot twenty feet square. Sometimes, in the providence of God, one ond of this board or stratum of vapor gets tilted up and then the whole stratum rushes toward the outlet, precisely as the end of this board of stratum of vapor gots tilted up and then the whole stratum rushes toward the outlet, precisely as the whole board follows the uppermost end to the surface of a tub of water when filled while confined by a stone to the bottom and suddenly liberated at one end. A spoonful of air compressed or reduced in bulk to the size of a pea gives out heat enough to ignite tinder or set on fire a piece of punk at the end of a piston, consequently if doubled in bulk it absorbs heat or produces cold enough to freeze water, thus expanding as it ascends and is relieved from the enormous weight of our ocean of air. The stratum of vapor expands and not only loses its own temperature but enters the region of perpetual cold in the upper air—the result is the nucleus of hail stones, not only frozen, but reduced perhaps seventy degrees below zero, each capable of freezing a tumbler full of water. Just as a small snow ball, rolled from the top of a hill increases as it descends, so our molecule of ice (or rather snow) increases in size as it falls toward the earth, especially in warm weather, when the lower stratum of air next the earth will preserve seven-fold as much water as invisible vapor than during winter; consequently the size of the hail stone must depend on the heat of the air at the surface of the earth, as the nucleus or original particle in the centre is cold must depend on the heat of the air at the surface of the earth, as the nucleus or original particle in the centre is cold enough to freeze all it meets and cool the air for many miles around. Upon breaking a bail stone this nucleus will be seen as a fibrous mass, and not gradually frosen as the surrounding clear ice.

While beneath the zerial ocean we may recognize this and electricity as "supended like the sword in the fable by a single hair,"—and invited by the policy of our Legislators who compel's so much swearing and profanity which constantly ascends from every state as another sort of incense should to invoke this in greater proportion in order to avert the infinite and inevitable result.
