Some fifteen or eighteen new houses are in process of erection at Bellaire. The town is said to be growing as fast as any place of its size in Ohio.

From fifty to seventy-five cars of freight are crossed on the flats between Benwood and Bellaire each day. It is said that the Baltimore company are so well satisfied with this arrangement that they are holding the project of a bridge in abeyance.

Speaking about that bridge, the company have an immense quantity of hewn stone scattered over the grounds fronting the river. Probably there are a thousand blocks of stone averaging a ton each.

The new nail mill is nearly ready for operations and will probably start this fail. It will be a co-operative establishment and several of our Wheeling people will be connected with its management.

who, finding the clerks good customers—they pay their bills every week—take care to serve them well. There is always a variety of food. For instance, yeaterday the bill of fare included roast mutton, cold roast beef, stewed rabbits, calves' head and steak pie.—The number of dinners is limited to rabbits, caives head and steak pic.—
The number of dinners is limited to seventy-five, because the table will not accommodate more. A separate joint is placed on each table; dishes of vegetables and bread also stand there, from which each person can take without lear of stint. One of the clerks takes his place as carver, and helps his messmates as often and to as much meat as may be required. Pudding is served either two or three times a week.—
Beer (Allsopp's best bitter, obtained direct from Burton,) is supplied at the rate of three half-pence for each half pint. Each clerk pays ten-pence half-penny for his dinner now, while before the cattle plague he only paid ninepence. That the caterer and his assistmants satisfy their customers is shown

The success of the dining room of the station clerks excited the envy of the clerks employed in the Railway Clearing House. There are some eight hundred of these clerks. A large proportion of the whole number are mere lads with ravenous appetites and microscopic salaries. The chief clerks had noticed that the writing power of this class was sensibly less after luncheon than in the morning. The luncheon consisted of bread and cheese, with a glass of stout or beer, the latter frequently of a noxious quality; and on returning to the desk their heads were not so clear as they ought to have been. Mr. P. W. Dawson, the Secretary of the Clearing House Committee, set himself the task of discovering a remedy. After a good deal of thinking he spoke upon the subject to the chairman of the committee, Mr. George Carr Glyu, M. P. By the influence of this gentleman seen that I have attempted to describe in both funcheon and dining-room."

Every evening tea is provided for about one hundred clerks at correspondingly low rates. Hash is never seen on the tables. "The clerks sitting at the different tables have the privilege of suggesting the kind of dinner they would like to have the next day, and in many little ways individual tastes may be gratified."

The club is managed by unpaid officers. It has its butcher, who supplies joints by contract. Each afternoon he, as well as the other trades-people patronized by the club, receives his orders for the next day. The simple machinery of the club never gets out of order, and Mr. Dawson has reason to be proud of his work.

companies and wealthier merchants of New York, should study these experi-ments carefully. There is enough prac-tical skill in the former class, and enough public spirit in the latter, to repeat them here, and it is quite time that itshould be done.

before him, with the hope of doing this world, half the quarrels and wars, clerks has not increased in the same proportion, Trade deals with economy, there is an eternal tendency to concentration. It is probable, that since leame to New York, thirty-six years ago, the trade of the city is four times as great as it was while the number of men engaged in it is not three times as large. This tendency is not to be resisted—the number of men constantly lessens compared to the amount of tradic done. We have our great houses like Stewart's, Clailin's, Lord & Taylor's, and we shall have more of them. These gentlemen will not employ a thousand men to do the work of five hundred. In my opinion, too many men look forward to a commercial career in life, to a simple exchange in

he says:

Social refinement and etiquette is rarely observed here; and to compare these people with our people, so far as the rules for social intercourse is concerned, is about like the wild Indian and the educated Frenchman. But these people understand and practice one thing better than our people ever did, and, I fear, ever will, and that is, how to make and keep money. Our people and, I fear, ever will, and that is, how to make and keep money. Our people would do well to imitate these people in this respect. The taxable property increased twenty-eight millions last year. Real estate is advancing rapidly. Farms that could have been bought at an average of sixty dollars an acre last spring, can't be bought to-day at seventy-five dollars per acre.

This is the country for the farmer. Everything he can raise he can find a cash market for at his door. Flour is now selling at $13. Bacon sides 20 cents

These prices are obtained here every day by the farmer, and as the winter approaches, they increase.

A MUITON MANIA is raging out West amongst little girls and grown women. It consists in an ambition to have a string of buttons of no use to any one, but of as great variety and costliness as possible. One lady in Louisville values her string at $1,000. They are carried in the hand, and the Kentucky State Fair Association gives a premium to the lady exhibiting the finest string of buttons.
