Thoughts for the Thoughtful—The Possible Results of the Great Political Contest.

From the day when the questions between the North and South were supposed to be definitely settled by the war, and constitutional amendments, most patriotic citizens have indulged in the belief that sectionalism had disappeared from American politics. The peculiar institution of the South, which had been for more than a generation the great stumbling block in the way of that hearty union which alone could give stability to the Republic, had disappeared. Slavery was abolished effectually and forever, and only by the military necessity which made it impossible that it should survive if the Union cause was maintained, but also by irreparable amendments of our fundamental law, ratified by the requisite majority of States. The subsequent measures of reconstruction at the South, in spite of occasional temporary mistakes, came at last to establish every State government on the substantial basis of universal amnesty and universal suffrage.

Up to the time of the present Presidential campaign, there was little or no evidence of the rampant sectionalism which now, under the lead of the Democratic party, unites the Southern States in a determined struggle for the possession of the Federal Government. The North and the South had at last appeared sincerely shaken hands across the bloody chasm, the Democratic party with its Southern allies had accepted as a status-quo in 1875 the old Union, and the Republican party, whose life had been devoted to warfare upon the sectionalism which subordinated the United States to the slave institutions of the South; it was believed, we may say almost universally, not only that the question of slavery had disappeared forever from our politics, but that sectionalism had disappeared with it. North and South, it was supposed, could fraternize upon the thoroughly established principle of the equal rights of all men.

But of late there have been coming more and more from the old, and that were supposed to have been the exploded prejudices and fallacies of the Democratic party and the Solid South in days gone by. Again the doctrine of State Sovereignty has been proclaimed against the doctrine of Nationality. The rights of State to be bound by the political system solemnly and constitutionally established, has been again asserted. The power of a State or of its citizens to grant or to deny equal suffrage at their pleasure, notwithstanding the absolute guarantee of it in the Constitution of the United States, has been assumed and acted upon. Hitherto, in large regions of the South the freedom of election has been worse than a slave; colored voters have been absolutely unable to exercise that freedom of franchise which was their right, guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States. They have been kept from the polls by thousands, and the policy of the shoguns and the derring-doers has restricted suffrage to those mainly who would vote the Democratic ticket. The right of free suffrage, held out ostensibly to the colored voter with one hand, has been effectually taken away with the other.

Not only has this policy, which revives all the sectionalism of the past and erects a despotism in the South in place of a Republic, been revived, but the Democratic party in the North has made itself an obedient tool and champion of the Solid South. Gaining control of one of the legislative branches of the Government, its first act was to appoint fourteen of the Confederate officers and soldiers to places vacated by the removal of men who had fought in the Union army. The act was a recent decision of the Supreme Court, in that in the taking of private property in the rebel States during the whole course of the war the United States Government put itself in the position of a trustee for the owners. In the following, the Democratic party in the North has been bound to pay the owners of the property which it took as trustee, in full value at the time it was taken. This most unprecedented ground is repudiated not only by the unanimous usage and the common sense of the people, but by the principles of true patriotism and the public interest. If the people of the whole country are to pay the Southern rebels for what they lost by going into the rebellion, or for what the Government took from them while in rebellion, all distinction between loyal patriotism and disloyal treason is wiped out at once and forever. The principle of the man who was an enemy to his country, and who lost, and was compelled to pay some share of the cost of putting down the rebellion, is now to be returned by the whole body of the people, the same as if he had been a steadfast adherent to the Union during the war, is to be shared and inadmissible.

But this Democratic Committee on War Claims has gone even farther in its policy of a doctrine which, if carried out in the action of Congress, would leave absolutely no limit to the taking of money out of the Treasury to pay the claims of the men lately in rebellion. That doctrine, which fallaciously pretends to be based upon a recent decision of the Supreme Court, is that in the taking of private property in the rebel States during the whole course of the war the United States Government put itself in the position of a trustee for the owners.
