The Intelligencer.

Office: Nos. 25 and 27 Fourteenth Street.

FREW & CAMPBELL,
PUBLISHERS AND PROPRIETORS.

TUESDAY MORNING, JULY 1, 1879.

Persons leaving town for the season, and Summer travelers, can have THE DAILY INTELLIGENCER mailed to them, postpaid, for 65 cents per month, the address being changed as often as desired.

THE Clearing House exchanges at the leading cities go on increasing week by week at a rate which makes it certain that the volume of business during the current year will be at least a fifth, and may be a fourth, larger than for last year. The returns for the last week reported show an increase of 23 per cent. over the corresponding week last year, and the advance is uniform over the country, New Orleans and Providence alone showing a decrease.

ONE of the reasons the Louisiana negroes gave for their exodus to Kansas was the fear that the constitutional convention would strip them of their political rights. The committee of the convention appointed to consider the elective franchise has just submitted a majority and a minority report, and it seems that the fears of the colored men were not without some foundation. The majority propose that the ballot be restricted to those who have paid all the taxes assessed against them, except for the year in which the election is held, and a poll-tax for that year also. They also propose that no one be allowed to vote after 1890, unless he can read any article of the State Constitution. The minority of the committee protest against any restriction on suffrage whatever, and pronounce its proposal unwise, unjust and suicidal. The New Orleans Times sides with the minority, and urges the convention not to adopt any restrictive measure calculated to create and keep alive the dread of class discriminations. Louisiana certainly needs something to spur up its tax payers to pay their large arrears, but the convention will hardly adopt a measure which, as the Times shows, will reduce the State's voting population from 25 to 50 per cent, and its delegation in the national House from six to three or four members.

COX, Mrs. Hull's murderer, is as far as possible removed from the average conception of a murderer, and appears to unite the stolidity of his Indian ancestry with the flippancy of the negro. Young, prepossessing, well-dressed and orderly in language and behavior, he talks clearly and coherently about the murder, expects to be hung, professes a "Christian hope" for the hereafter, and is prepared to save the government all trouble by pleading guilty. Except for his own confession, the evidence against him is wholly circumstantial. His details of the crime show that it was not a premeditated murder—he only intended to bind and gag his victim—but New York law makes the taking of life in the commission of a felony murder in the first degree. The account he gives of the crime throws new light on the inefficiency of the police. He entered by an open window, which the police overlooked; tore the sheet up with his teeth to bind Mrs. Hull, leaving marks with his teeth the police failed to find; and went out, leaving an open door which the patrolman did not notice. The most horrible fact connected with the whole matter is that a conspiracy was plainly forming to swear poor Mr. Hull's life away by self-accused accomplices, with no other object apparently than to oblige the police with a "clew." It is a curious feature of criminal life in New York that it includes men having "relations" with the police, ready to curry favor by the manufacture of "clews" to fit the "theory" of the detectives.

Religious Drift and Discussion.

At the Baltimore District Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church (colored), which ended its session last week, the question, "Does the use of tobacco impair the influence of ministers with their congregations?" was decided in the negative by a vote of five to fifteen. The following resolution was also passed:

"That we believe the election of a man of African descent to the office of bishop is the only way by which the Methodist Episcopal Church can prove to us and the world that we are fully recognized as equals of all others in said Episcopal Church"

A Baptist church in Vicksburg, Miss., was recently destroyed by fire, and the Jewish Temple has been offered to the congregation free of rent and unconditionally until they rebuild.

A certain Mr. Bear, writing to a Mennonite newspaper, finds "Twenty Reasons for not Going to a Concert." A fair specimen of them all is the following "reason":

"Because I am directed to live in the the Spirit; and if I am constantly under the influence and guidance of the Holy Spirit I am satisfied that I shall not be found at a concert."

A correspondent of the Methodist advises the use of water instead of wine at communion, and says:

"The emphasis of the command which institutes the Lord's Supper, is not on the pronoun 'this,' indicating the substances used, but on the verbs 'eat' and 'drink,' and on the spiritual purpose designated by the phrase 'in remembrance of me.' The symbolic character of the Sacrament no more requires a particular fluid than it requires a particular kind of bread. The bread used in our time is not usually, at least, perhaps never, the same kind as that used by our Saviour. He instituted the supper with the common drink of the country and time: whether it was a fermented wine does not concern our argument. Our common drink is water and not wine; and it is practically difficult for most churches to procure wine that is not adulterated. We should use water at the Lord's Supper with a good conscience."

The Irish Presbyterians in General Assembly have been wrestling with the question whether instrumental music shall be allowed in their churches. After an exciting debate, continuing till near midnight, the vote stood 35 majority against the instruments. The Assembly also put itself on record to the effect that David's psalms must not be superseded by the uninspired hymns of these degenerate latter days. The Irish Presbyterians evidently surpass their Scotch brethren in their loyalty to the traditions of the fathers.

Montaigne closes one of his essays by saying: "In the judgment I make of another man's life I always observe how he carried himself at its close; and the principal concern I have for my own is, that I may die handsomely—that is, patiently and without noise."

A correspondent of the Independent writing about the trial of Professor Robertson Smith for heterodoxy in his views of the Old Testament, says that at the session of the Free Church Synod in Edinburgh on the 27th of May, "one member, Mr. Kidston, excitedly declared that he believed in Deuteronomy, no matter what might be said by any Professor Smith, or Smythe, or Smithey in the world! And, of course, the debate had its humors. Mr. Shaw, of Laggan, moved that the matter be put in the hands of the committee of the oldest members of the Assembly—a suggestion which his own very white hairs made subject for amusement. On the suggestion of a waggish brother, he amended his motion to read that the committee should consist of the oldest and soundest, which elicited still greater merriment. He waited in silence for some time for a seconder; but, when the Chair announced that the motion was not seconded, 'Well, it is a shame,' said he, 'a burning shame!' and took his seat, amid the laughter and cheers of the generation that valued not age and soundness. It is noteworthy that the members of the faculties of the various theological schools are unanimous (or practically so) in Professor Smith's defense. It certainly would not speak well for the doctrines of the Free Church to say that those doctrines were unanimously discarded by the very men whom the Church has selected as best able to teach theology." The Methodist discusses the same topic under the title "The Calvinistic Thaw."

"Speak for yourself, doctor," is the observation of the New York Observer to this sentence from Phillips Brook's recent Princeton Review article: "A large acquaintance with clerical life has led me to think that almost any company of clergymen gathering together and talking freely to each other, will express opinions which would greatly surprise and at the same time greatly relieve the congregations who ordinarily listen to those ministers. "Thus interpreted," continues the Observer, "the language he employs is translated to read as follows: I freely express opinions on religious subjects to my clerical friends, when we are conversing, which would greatly surprise my congregation who listen to me on the Sabbath. I am one of those who make myself liable to the Master's terrible rebuke which he gave to the Scribes and Pharisees. I do not believe the doctrine of verbal inspiration as my fathers held it, but I have not told my people so. I do not believe that the everlasting punishment of the wicked is a clear and certain truth of revelation. But I have never said so to my people. I am now speaking of whether these ideas are true or not. I am speaking of whether I think they are true, and what my duty is with reference to my belief." The Observer does not believe Dr. Brook's opinion, as cited above, is that of any large number of Christian ministers in the churches called evangelical, and asks its clerical readers to make its editor, the patriarchal Dr. Prime, their father confessor in the matter.

At the funeral of the late Baron Lionel de Rothschild, the Rev. B. H. Ascher, Burial Rabbi of the United Synagogue, offered the following prayer: "Holy Father in Heaven, God of life and death—with a heart full of tears, but with eyes of hope, we look to Thee for Thy mercy and Thy kindness. Do Thou receive the pious departed in Thy infinite kindness with his beatified ancestors in the regions of bliss and eternity. Send Thy truth, Thy light to console his descendants with Thy Sacred word. Inspire them with filial feeling to follow in the footsteps of their revered father. O, Fountain of Mercy, as the deceased was a messenger of peace and happiness to man, grant from Thy celestial regions that he may bring the message of peace and comfort to his spouse, who so lovingly, so patiently stood at his side alike in weal and woe, gladness and sadness. Send Thy comfort and Thy consolation to that God-fearing mother in Israel, who has brought solace and pleasure to many. O, pardon his errors, cast his sins into oblivion, remember only his pious deeds, and reawaken him to everlasting life, happiness and glory. Amen."

The most remarkable love story of the summer is told by The Port Jarvis Union. Four years ago, a gentleman of twenty-three won the heart of a lady of nineteen. She was the daughter of pious parents, and although she was not connected with any church, looked with a feeling akin to horror on anything approaching scepticism. But the time came when she learned that her lover was a deist; that he had no veneration for the Bible, and took no interest in churches. She was deeply pained by the revelation. She sent for her lover and endeavored to convince him of his error, but he was not satisfied with her arguments. She finally wrote to him a tear-stained letter bidding him good-by forever. The lady mourned, but tried to satisfy herself that she had acted correctly. Two years made her more liberal than she had been. The more she read the more she distrusted her former decision, and she finally become quite as liberal as the lover she had discarded. The lover too, had undergone a change. Last winter a revival of religion took place in the city in which he was engaged in business. Suffice it to say that he united with the Church, and in a short time became a zealous member. He thought over the action of his former sweetheart in discarding him for his infidelity, and wrote her a brief note asking the privilege of once more calling on her. When she timidly apologized for her previous dismissal of him, he, to her surprise, defended her conduct, said she had been in the right, and in her place he would do the same. Her heart sank at these words. She confessed the great change in her sentiments; from being a firm believer in the Bible, she had discarded it, and with it her belief in any revealed religion. He pleaded with her, urged everything he could think of to induce her to change her mind. She could not, and told him so. He felt that he must not be yoked with an unbeliever, and gave her up.

Bishop Huntington, of the diocese of Central New York, recently advertised for five young men to do missionary duty for a salary of $150 a year and board. The advertisement said: "They must be well educated, sound in mind and body, users of no artificial stimulants or narcotics, men of good practical sense, and a possession of these qualifications must be sufficently certified to." In several quarters he was criticised for this, and the objection was freely made that no young man of culture and education ought to be asked to work for such slender pay. But the Bishop takes the remarks of his critics in high dudgeon, and says that they ridicule him for imagining that out of a hundred who have forsworn the world for the kingdom of heaven, and who preach sermons and sing hymns about cross-bearers and marching soldiers and a suffering sainthood, and the glories of self-renunciation, there may possibly be five, only five, who would not count a very abstemious ministry in one of our Middle States intolerable, or the offer of it either an affront or a joke. He adds:

"The day of great sacrifices and great honors, young man, are gone by. Christian heroism is out of fashion. After you have recited your Pearson and Hooker, take down your list of 'good parishes,' light your pipe, and discuss with your companions the comparative salaries, the social refinements, snug rectories, and other material advantages. If you hear of a bishop who wants the other style of man laugh at him. Make early arrangements for matrimony and settling down. Resent any expectation that you are to be more sparing of yourself than the children of the world whom you are going to convert; and preach the crucifixtion of feighteen centuries ago."

There are two sides to the question. The salary named is very small, but the young man who takes it goes, as it were, "to learn the business." If he succeeds, it is a feather in his cap for a call to some field of labor. If he is to fail he had better fail in an humble field of this description than in a gigantic city church. And then, perhaps, there are among the great host of theological graduates some of whom $150 and board is a very fair compensation. There are merchants who do a large business and incur heavy responsibilities whose net profits at the close of a year's work are not more than $150 and board. It is true that such men have generally labored with a view to getting more than this, but their efforts have not been crowned with success. The over supply of ministers is so great in nearly all the denominations that many good men are clamoring for work at exceedingly small figures. We notice in a religious paper an advertisment to the effect that

"A Presbyterian minister, of good abilities in good standing, would be glad to minister to a church, or to supply a church for a time, where the compensation would be sufficient for the daily wants of a family. An opportunity for labor and a bare support are all that are wanted." Furthermore, we believe that, distasteful as it may seem to work for such poor pay, if a respectable country church were to advertise for a pastor at $150 and board, it would have several dozen applicants. Meanwhile a "big gun" is supplying the pulpit of one of the fashionable churches in Brooklyn at seventy-five dollars a Sunday "C. O. D." How the hundred and fifty dollar brethren must wish they had his post for just two Sundays!

Can't Preach Good.

No man can do a good job of work, preach a good sermon, try a lawsuit well, doctor a patient, or write a good article when he feels miserable and dull, with sluggish brain and unsteady nerves, and none should make the attempt in such a condition when it can be so easily and cheaply removed by a little Hop Bitters. See "Truths" and "Proverbs," other column.
