WHEELING, JANUARY 29, 1889.

There is grave anxiety in Rome caused by the failing health of the Pope. He was unconscious for a half hour yesterday.

It would be an economy of space in the Wheeling newspapers to give a list of Democrats who are not applicants for local office.

The eyes of all the world are centered upon France. Is the Republic on the eve of disruption? Is the question that is uppermost in everybody's mind. Boulanger seems to be in a position to answer it.

The Scotch-Irish Congress, which is to be held at Columbia, Tenn., on the 8th of next May, will be a gathering of great interest. The extract from the Philadelphia Times, published in another column, is worthy of a reading.

An Indianapolis special to the New York Press says if General Goff fails to win the West Virginia Senatorship he will most likely be settled upon by the Attorney Generalship in President Harrison's cabinet, and would probably accept.

It is now stated that Lord Sackville-West will be appointed Ambassador to Constantinople. The English Government is wise. It takes care this time to send "My lad" to a country where there are no presidential elections.

Those who recall the political events of 1861 in this neck of the woods will read with mingled surprise and amusement the announcement by an office-seeker in yesterday's Register that he "voted the Democratic ticket in 1861 when Democrats were afraid to vote." The gentleman who signs the card is evidently a little mixed in his history.

The Journal is the name of a bright new daily published at Washington, Pa., the first issue appearing last Saturday. Thomas F. Irwin, late of Pittsburgh, is the editor, and judging from the excellent quality of the first number, he will make a success of the venture. The paper is non-political, and is brim-full of fresh local news, written in the most attractive form.

The death of James Neeson, Esq., of Richmond, chronicled in our news columns this morning, though not unexpected, will be noted with regret by his large circle of old acquaintances and friends in West Virginia. During the years immediately preceding the war of the rebellion, Mr. Neeson was a prominent figure in this section of the State. He enjoyed many friendships that were not severed even by the bitterness of the war feeling that arose between them.

The Register's Charleston specials still insist that the Republicans are trembling in their shoes "over the threatened exposure of attempts at bribery," and that "for prudential reasons the case was not presented to the House Saturday." If there were anything in this blow about corruption, and if "all the evidence is in the hands of the Democrats," there can be no "prudential reasons" for delay. Truth is truth and should not be kept from the light an instant. Delays, and the mere indulgence in brag and bluster amount to nothing.

CABINET gossip is growing more interesting as the time for a settlement of the question draws near. Speculation becomes more definite, and the new Cabinet begins to take some sort of shape in the mind's eye. One of the latest guesses, founded on recent circumstances, is a good one and is as follows: James G. Blaine, Secretary of State; William B. Allison, Secretary of the Treasury; Thomas C. Platt, Postmaster General; Russell A. Alger, Secretary of War; John W. Foster, Secretary of the Navy; Warner Miller, Secretary of Agriculture; Estee Swift, Goff, Clayton and others prominent for the Interior Department and Attorney Generalship. It is suggested that the feeling of harmony and good will that would follow the advent of New York's two greatest Republican leaders, Miller and Platt, into the Cabinet, would demonstrate the wise party leadership of Mr. Harrison.

Will History Repeat Itself?

The result of the election in Paris Sunday was more than a surprise to the government. It was a defeat, and Boulanger, the adventurer, the prototype of Louis Napoleon, and the revolutionist, took practically hold of the fate of the Republic in his hand. Mr. Smalley, the Paris correspondent of the New York Tribune, describes Boulanger as a weak and incapable man, "who is thought to be dangerous because he has not been laughed into obscurity, and who owes his prominence in French affairs to accident, without having in him the stuff of a dictator." This is an accurate photograph of Boulanger as it is of Louis Napoleon. Louis, like the man whose name is in the mouth of everybody to-day, represented nothing but hatred of the Republic, and like him, gathered about him the disaffected classes and the worst element of French political and social adventurers. Not until by degrees, and through a combination of circumstances, through his own ability as a leader, was he considered dangerous. Finally the opportunity came to him and he took advantage of it to show himself the enemy of liberty. Boulanger finds himself in possession of the same opportunity.

In commenting upon the startling parallel presented here, the New York Tribune says that its force is not materially weakened by the fact that Louis Napoleon had an historic name to trade upon, whereas Boulanger has none, but is simply the Unknown on Horseback. The Tribune continues:

It was only when King Louis of Holland was commanded by his brother, Napoleon, to acknowledge for Imperial reasons of state, that the child that he cynically assented, and the estrangement and intrigues of the parents were so well known that only ignorant Frenchmen believed that Louis Napoleon had a drop of real Bonaparte blood in his veins. He grew up in exile with the instincts of an adventurer, coquetting with Italian carbonari and Polish patriots, publishing dull manuals of artillery and incoherent volumes of political reverses, masquerading in front of the fortune of his country with his eagle, and leaving behind him in New York, London and Continental capitals the racial reputation of a dissolute private life. Such was the grotesque figure of the illegitimate Bonaparte, who, prior to 1848, had only emerged from obscurity long enough to be laughed at as one cast originally for an imperial part, but degraded to the functions of a low comedian. The expulsion of the Orleans family armed him with what he wanted in opportunity, and he made the most of it.

Boulanger has not had as checked a career as Louis Napoleon, but he has shown himself to be equally sordid, vulgar, ambitious and unscrupulous. His rise in the army was due to the patronage of the Orleans, which he repaid at the time with fawning flatteries, and subsequently with ingratitude and repudiation of pledges. He has shown that he can persevere in a foolish lie even when it has been revealed as such; that he can break his word in command of an army corps and be false to his oath; that he can proclaim himself to be the only soldier in France, and then narrowly escape being spitted on a duel with a rival old lawyer; that he can parade himself as a man of destiny; and that in trafficking for popular support he can take his irredeemable promises into any and every market and impose upon the credulity of all investors in political notions. That is Boulanger—a figure utterly without dignity—a character without honor or honesty, and that, too, was the crowned intriguer, Napoleon III, who cheated the Nation out of its liberties.

There is a close correspondence in the political tactics of the two men. Louis Napoleon was elected to the Assembly from various departments by a coalition of antagonistic elements, and finally was a candidate for Paris, precisely as Boulanger stands to-day. He made as poor an appearance in debate as the General, and maintained equal silence and reserve respecting his political programme. After his election to the Presidency he represented those who had illustrated existing institutions and were clamoring for a revision of the Constitution and the dissolution of the Chamber. He played audaciously and unscrupulously for the highest stakes, and while surrounded with advisers allowed none to see his cards until the game had been won. Is Boulanger such a player?

Doesn't Understand the Real Situation.

The new Governor in West Virginia is another reminder of how narrow an escape the country had in the last Presidential election from a vote so close as to depend for its settlement on the vote of that State. Politics so little understood with scraps as those who are doing their best to precipitate a violent conflict for possession of the Governor's chair would have been capable of a great deal in the line of reckless tampering with the returns, had they become the arbiters of the great struggle for possession of the National Government. It sounds strange to read in the columns of so sober and judicious a paper as the Wheeling Intelligencer a statement that if General Goff should, on the 4th of March, be denied entry into the State House and next, as Commander-in-Chief of the Militia, he will call on the military. If Governor Goff resorts to this point and also calls on the military to aid him, the Government of the United States will be promptly appealed to, and there is no reasonable doubt that it will promptly respond to the appeal.

And, however defensible such action might be, it does not speak well for the political education of the people of West Virginia that any elected officers of theirs should take the risk of inflicting on them so disgraceful a state of things. We have had late a good many illustrations of the dangers of partisanship run mad, but none quite so impressive as this one in West Virginia.

Madame Patti has recently given her rules for a day to an interviewer. "When I am at home," she says, "I go to bed early—at 10:30. I rise early, that is, early for singers, which means 10:30. You see, when I am not singing, I sleep nearly twelve hours out of the twenty-four. Plenty of sleep, that is the secret of beauty and freshness. I don't sleep until 10, of course, but I make it a point not to get up at once when I awake, but to take a glass of hot water and a lemon and read my letters before I get out of bed. It's a mistake to jump up right away after waking. I bathe in tepid water, and then sponge off with a cold sponge. On singing days I take a light and early dinner at 3, and only a biscuit and cup of hot bouillon after the performance. No great quantity of food and plenty of sleep—that's the way to keep one's complexion and figure bright. I rarely touch wine; a liquor glass of whisky after luncheon or dinner, sometimes a glass of champagne—nothing more."

Cross-eyed Girls and Bad Luck. From the Louisville Journal.

"A cross-eyed girl is death to good luck on the stage," said the old showman, who was in a pensive and talkative mood.

"They are dead sure to bring bad luck—a regular bad omen, and no mistake. Lots of us won't travel with one in the company. I won't if I know it, and I reckon I do. The opera company here this week, though, don't think so. I noticed a twist in one of the girls of the chorus. And other bad one is a yellow clarinet in the orchestra. I'd rather play in front of a loaded cannon. Crickets! how I suffered one night when I was playing before a house full of people. The footlights and saw an old fellow with a black wig on his head blowing bad luck at me out of the nozzle of a yellow clarinet. I was hoodooed for sure, and I didn't get into luck again for over six months, and then on by picking up someone in Pittsburgh, Pa. I know lots of the boys who won't face one."

Heware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is tenfold to the good they can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., of Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, and acts directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine, it is taken internally and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co.

FASHIONS FOR YOUNG MEN.

The use of the diamond solitaire as a full dress suit is confined to the "lower stratum."

The average man would be happier if he had fewer pockets to assist him in losing things.

What may be called a new fad is to have one's autograph embroidered on one's suspenders.

Moustache combs of solid silver, daintily flowered, are a recent caprice of the metal-workers' art.

There is for the moment more or less prejudice against stripes and underwear. Whites and greys are favorites.

"Dark rose" is a new ground color in neckwear. It will make its appearance among the early offerings of next spring.

All the colors of the rainbow are seen in the silk stripes that run through negligee shirts intended for next summer.

A cut away cut in fine waist cloth, with the rest of some fancy figured material, is considered a dressy combination for business wear.

All reports to the contrary notwithstanding, the black silk skull-cap continues to be the popular head protector for railway traveling.

Black and steel gray are effectively combined in silk handkerchiefs, and produced in a happy medium between the "loud" and the sober.

The attempt to revive scarf rings is a failure. Puff scarfs of extreme size in white ribbed silk are a decided "go" for afternoon wedding wear.

An observer of fashion's whims predicts an early revival of the old-time ruffled shirt bosom. As a prophet he is, we are bound to say, a failure.

Here is a suggestion for a ladies' gift umbrella. Let the donor have his photograph, postage stamp size, set in the handle and covered with glass.

Ties of plain white plique which go twice around the collar, and are folded into a bow by the wearer, are accepted by "high dressers" as correct for full dress.

Woolen gloves in dark, solid colors and fancy mixtures, have almost entirely superseded white Ringwoods. They are cheaper, keep cleaner and are just as warm.

One and two strands of silk-stitching are seen on the lavender gloves shown by high class furnisher whose customers favor less width than is seen in the embroidery commonly used.

Beautiful effects are obtained by reproducing the bright postage stamps of the various countries, and combining them for decorative purposes on ash trays, cigar cases, card cases, etc.

A shirt seen at a recent fancy dress ball had a dead black bosom, and the collar and cuffs and the were also black. It was worn in conjunction with trousers, vest and coat in plain white silk.

Double-breasted vests with extra large lapels, and buttoned medium high, have been taken up by the patrons of a well known Fifth Avenue tailor as a welcome change from the single-breasted affairs so long in vogue.

Rheumatism and Catarrh. Rheumatism and catarrh are both blood diseases. In many severe cases they have yielded to treatment with B. B. B. (Bosnian Blood Balm), made by Blood Balm Co., Atlanta, Ga. Write for book of convincing proofs. Sent free.

R. P. Dodge, Atlanta, Ga., says: "My wife had catarrh and nothing did her any good. Her constitution finally failed and she died. I placed her on a use of B. B. B. and to my surprise her recovery was rapid and complete."

W. P. McDaniel, Atlanta, Ga., writes: "I was much afflicted with rheumatism so bad I could not get along without crutches. I had neuralgia in the head. First-class physicians did me no good. Then I used B. B. B. and in a few days I was cured. I cheerfully recommend it as a good tonic and quick cure."

Mr. Mattie Nichols, Knoxville, Tenn., writes: "I had catarrh six years and a most distressing cough, and my eyes were inflamed. Five bottles of B. B. B. cured me."

John M. Davis, Troy, Texas, writes: "I was subject to a number of cases of influenza, rheumatism, which six bottles of B. B. B. promptly cured. I am cured. I have not felt the slightest pain since."
