The current was too strong to row a boat, so Fegel and six atrong men took a party of thirty people from the Thoroughfare Hotel to Atlantic City proper. The ladies were led several hundred yards through the water which was up to their necks. Their engines were plowing through from two to four feet of water, which threatened every moment to put out the fires, and as there was a regular sea alread there was no alternative but to return. So the engines were reversed and the trip back, now doubly hazardous because the waters had risen several inches, began. Hardly a furloug had been covered however, when the fires were extinguished by the rushing torpe is of water which now dashed against the car with terrifle force, breaking the windows and completely enveloping the trains in the land of the wind in the source of the wind in the rate of the same than the fires were exting the windows and completely enveloping the trains in and coast is a tossing billow, ocean, bearing wreckage on every wave. Since Monday night the storm has raged without abatement. Yesterday's dawn showed a dozen vessels, which had sought the refuge of the breakwater. The refuge was insufficient. By 11 o'clock the sea broke over the breakwater, wrecked the telegraph station, carried away the big fog bell and rashed forward, sweeping away the steamboat pier and dashing the Italian bark "I. I. Salvadori" against the iron Government pier. The piers of Brown & Co. and Luce Sons gave sway and were swept to sea. No effort was made to save personal property, so saudden and unexpected was the terrible rise in the flood on the meadows. Horses were drowned in their stables and chickens by the hundreds were drowned and their bodies strewn all along the cross avenues. Dozens of houses were picked up bodily by the waves, thrown across the railroad fracks or carried squares away from their original locality. Some of them were taken farout on the meantows and tossed around like cork.

Late on Tucsday night the shrill whistle of a steamer was heard above the roaring of the surf. She had come ashore opposite Arkansas avenue, and her signals of distress were promptly responded to by the crew of the Atlantic City life saving station. They hurried along the beach with their apparatus, but the great waves made any attempt at rescue impossible. Mr. Love was warned by the porter that there would probably be trouble, as a passenger had sent a telegram ahead that the party was coming. "At Baxley, Ga.," said the preacher, "a dozen rough looking men boarded the train and ordered us out of the car. We didn't go, and we were then assaulted. We were all badly beaton. Revolvers were drawn and we were driven out of the car. I think some of us would have been killed if thad not been for the interference of the conductor." He attributed the assault entirely to race prejudice.

to the station and searched letters and newspaper clippings were found containing what seemed to be a terrible revelation. The letters were addressed to a friend and stated that the writer was deairous of keeping out of the reach of the officers. The clippings told of a confession made by the man to the effect that, while gambling on the night of June 10, 1884, at Fayetteville, W. Va., he got into a fight with another player and, drawing a revolver, shot him three times, killing him instantly. For this murder Thompson has ever since been a fugitive from justice.

Thompson is a printer by trade, and has been at work here for a few days on one of the city papers. Since being arrested he has told several stories to the officers, but they do not put any cre-
