Simple Services Over the Remains of Queen Victoria's Son-in-Law. COWES, Isle of Wight, Feb. 5.—In spite of damp and foggy weather Cowes and this neighborhood were crowded with visitors this morning. Business all wan visitors this morning. Business all over the Isle of Wight was practically suspended and the mass of inhabitants flocked toward this part of the island to pay a last tribute of respect to the remains of Prince Henry of Eattenberg, husband of Princess Beatrice, who died January 20, while on his way from Cape Coast to the Island of Madeira.

The remains were landed at Portsmouth yesterday and were transferred to the royal yacht Alberta. On board the last named vessel they were conveyed to Cowes, escorted by the Prince of Wales, Princess Beatrice, the Duke of Connaught, and Princess Louis and Francis of Battenberg. Upon arrival at Trintty Pier here, the body was met by Queen Victoria and the Battenberg children. The remains rested on board the Alberta all night.

Half masted flags and other emblems of mourning were displayed on all sides ashore, nearly all those present from the different towns on the island or from the mainland were dressed in mourning or half mourning, and

Immediately after the curriage of the princess came the queen's naval and military attaches, the representatives of the various embassies, a deputation from the Frussian Garde Corps, the court officials, the officers of the admiralty, the commander-in-their, Lord Wolsey and his staff and the army and navy officials closed the procession.

The general opinion in Wall street to-day was that European financiers cannot fall to be profoundly impressed by the result of the popular loan experiment. The large percentage of foreign bids is very significant, in view of the probable unfavorable effect of the free silver manifestations of the United States senateupon European sentiment. Buring the forenoon the market displayed hesitancy which was reflected in an irregular movement of prices, and moderate volume of business. The official anouncements regarding the agregate bids and average of prices imparted actual buoyancy to the market, prices advancing all along the line on the execution of heavy orders.
