Figure with Him in the Battle of Opequa or Winchester-A Terrible Res ponsibiltty Rested Upon Illin-Won Praise and Promotion as Staff Sergeant and as Staff Cautaln at Antietam and Kerns-Stanley Mathews served with the rank of lieutenant colonel. Later Hayes be-came colonel. William McKinley, jr., served in the regiment as first and second lieutenants, and later as captain. His commission as second lieutenant was dated November 3, 1862; that of first lieutenant March 50, 1863, and cap-tain July 25, 1864. Ex-President Hayes went in as major at the organization, June 7, 1861, at town-Gen. Hayes Never Expected to See Him Come Ont Alive at One Time in that Battle-He Saves a Bat erv.

From "The American Soldier in the Civil War": McKinley's war record is full of honor. He was younger than the average recruit, and he had the activity and enthusiaism that leads a really young youth to do more than is required of him. Handleapped at the beginning by being detailed to the com-missary department, he showed such executive ability in filling the stomachs of his comrades out on the battle line that he soon emerged from the safety of the rear, through promotion, to higher things.

Staff officers are the eyes and ears of the commandant. There are times, too, when they have to take big chancesback their own judgment heavily. So well did Lleutenant McKinley serve on General Hayes's staff that General Crook took him on his staff to keep up the supplies for his Eighth corps. He wasn't twenty-one years old then. He had had no previous military traininghadn't even been in the military organizations of the period before the war. Fram General Crook's staff Captain McKinley went to General Sheridan's and General Hancock's. He also served as acting assistant adjutant general of the First division. First army corps, on as acting assistant adjusted selected of the First division, First army corps, on the staff of General Carroll.

When the war was over Major McKinley proved himself to be of that type of the American citizen who has no use for things military in times of peace.
At the battle of Opequan, or Winchester, as the Confederates call it, McKinley distinguished himself as a staff officer of twenty years who wasn't afraid to assume unexpected responsibility, and this readiness, combined with good judgment and sound common sense won him the hearty prulse of his superiors.
Opequan was the first great battle of the Shenandoah campaign of '64.
Sheridan had been waiting for Lee to draw off some of Early's army, and when this division came, Early made things worse for himself by separating his wings. Upon one of these wings Sheridan fung his army on September 19, 1861, the Chickamauga was being fought and won.

At that time McKinley had reached went by the board and much hardship ensued.

The next point where the regiment faced the enemy was at South Mountain, September 15, 1862, and Antietam on the 17th. In marching from Went Virginia to take part in South Mountain and Antietom, Washington was passed through. This was probably the first sight the future Presidents had of the national capital.

At South Mountain the Twenty-third was the first regiment under fire. It was led by Lleutenant Colonel Hayes. The regiment in making an advance on the enemy, posted behind a Stone wall.

Sheridan flung his army on September 19, 1851, the Chickamauga was being fought and won.

At that time McKinley had reached the rank of captain, in his company, and was serving on the staff of General Seridan, General Sheridan, General Harris had been ordered to move his division to the right of the Sixth Corps. He selected his own route and got iost in the woods, General Sheridan then sent Captain McKinley to order General Duval to take his second division to the position which General Harris had failed to find. General Duval on receiving the order and not knowing the lay of the land, asked of the young aide:

"By what route shali I move my command."

Captain McKinley knew no more of the country than the general idd. However, without having been given explict directions, he said:

"I will not budge without definite orders," replied Duval, who had no mind to get lost in the shuffle.

"This is a case of great emergency, general," returned McKinley. "I order you, by command of General Sheridan to move your columinal up this ravine to a position on the right of the army," General Duval obeyed, reached the right of the line of battle, and subsequently made a successful attack from this position, Half an bour after he got there General Harris came up and took a hand in the fightor. Then general said: "That is all right, my boy, at said subservice and subservice and subservice and saids."

Captain acking retained to ease-al Sheridan and reported. Then gener-al said: "That is all right, my boy, since the movement turned out success-fully; but if it had resulted in disaster, it would have been all wrong."
Which goes to show that there are more chances in war than the chances more chances in war than the chances of life or death.

Bright and brave soldiers didn't like like to be detailed on special duty which took them away from their regiment, nor did they like being assigned to the provost guard to pick up stragglers, nor to the wagon train. Yet this work had to be done, and though disarregable, the good soldier obeyed with few able, the good solder obeyed with re-murmurings.

McKinley, it may be imagined, did-not relish his work as resimental quar-terinaster sergeant, which kept him with the commissary supplies, a mile or two from the battlefield. Even this At Antietam, September 17, 18 termaster Sergeant McKinley At Alledam, september of the activities and set them to making coffee, and loading up two commissary wagons with the cheering drink and hunks of bread. The mules of one wagon were disabled and the other wagon was sent at dusk two miles to the front, where the regiment was posted. Our army had been having heavy fighting up to that time and McKinley's regiment went into the battle break regiment went into the battle break agreat cheering was heard from the left of the Twenty-third Ohio. The division commander sent out an aid to see what was the cause, and it was found to be the arrival on the field of Quartermaster McKinley with his coffee and excoffee coolers.

This volunteered exploit put on Mc-Kinley's shoulders his first straps, and be became Second Lieutenant McKinley.

At one time in the battle of Kernstawn, fought on Sunday, July 24, 1851, after the federal lines were pushed back, it was noticed that one of the regiments was still in the orchard, where they were posted at the beginning of the battle, General Rutherford R. Hayes, commanding the brigade, turned to Lieutenant McKinley, who was serving as quartermaster on the brigade staff, and directed him to take an order to retreat to the colonel of the regiment. Hayes toved the boy lieutenant as his own som and watched his course across the fields with great anxiety, Shells exploded above and around McKinley. They burst in the air and they plowed graves in the ground. Bullets tore up the turn and struck the Virginia rall fences with a spud. Oney McKinley was entirely hidden by the smake of an exploiting shell, and General Hayes and the staff thought the young man had gone down. But he emerged, slitting on his little brown horse as erect as a doorpost. McKinley reached the regiment and led it through the woods towards Winchester to lis place in the brigade. As the Reitmant drew up by the side of the general to sainte and report, Hayes aid; "In ever expected to see you in life again."

Late that afternoon the brigade came upon a battery, whose four guins and caiseons had been abandoned by the captain and left for the Confederater. McKinley asked if he could save the surface and the said; "In ever expected to see you in life again,"

The regiment in making an advance on the enemy, posted behind a stone wall, was badly worsted. Here Hayes had his arm broken. Capitain Skiles lost an arm, Capitain Ritter a leg, and Lieutenants Hood, Ritter and Smith were each badly wounded. Of the 250 men who went in, over 100 were killed or wounded. Later in the day the fight went on, swelling the total of killed and wounded to about 250. Three bayonet charges were made by the regiment during the day. After the famous Hunter's raid to Lynchburg, and the fighting and hard service incident to it, the regiment fell back to the Valley of Virginia. On October 19, 1864, it took part in the battle of Cedar Creek, made famous by Sheridan's noted ride. After Cedar Creek the Twenty-third saw no more desperate experience, although frequently engaged in light affairs with the enemy.

Ex-President Hayes went in an major at the organization, June 7, 1861, at Camp Chase, Ohio. On October 23 of the same year he became lieutenant colonel. A year later he became colonel, and two years later, October 23, 1864, he went to the rank of brigadier.

Rosecrans did not take the field with the regiment, but was made brigadier. The Twenty-third was one of the first regiments organized in the state. The first service performed was a march to Clarksburg, W. Va., where it arrived late in July, 1861. The day following the regiment began the stern business of war by going on a hunt for guerrillas, operating with Weston an a base. It seems like romane to imagine such an array of embryo greatness chasing bushwhackers about the spurs of Itch mountain in a drenching rain storm. There was Rosecrans, who afterwards became major general; Rutherford B. Hayes, who became President; Stanley Matthews, who reached the supreme bench, and William McKinley, Jr., who geems in a fair way to become our next chief magistrate.

In September, 1861, the Twenty-third had, its first experience under fire at Conffex Ferry, where Rosecrans and Floyd had a passage at arms. During the winter of 1861 the regiment devoted considerable attention to the enemy. On the 23d of April, 1862, the Twenty-third led Rosecrans' command on a march to Princeton, W. Va., Eleutenant Colonel Hayes being in command.

On the 8th of May the regiment fell into adverse lines. It was attacked by four regiments and a battery of six pieces under Confederate General Heth, and was driven back and badly upset. His tenta, camp and garrison equipage went by the board and much hardship consued. Munyon's Headache Cure stops head-Munyon's Pile Ointment positively cares all forms of piles. Price, 25c.
