Miners and Uniformity.

It is pleasing to note that the uniformity agreement by the coal operators in the Pittsburgh district is not dead nor even dragging, as was feared. The delay, it appears, was caused by the desire to draft the document carefully, and it now having been completed, the work of securing signatures will begin. There is little doubt expressed that the required number of signatures will be given and the success of the agreement is regarded as a foregone conclusion.

This is the first important step in the direction of a permanent settlement of the difficulties that have prevailed in the coal trade and contributed more largely than anything else to bring on the strike. The agreement prohibits many of the evils that have cursed the mining industry and proved not only a source of serious grievances complained of by the miners, but have been disadvantageous to the operators themselves.

While the question of the miner's scale is not directly a part of the agreement, it will open the way for a just and permanent settlement of that point of dispute. The miners are, therefore, interested in furthering the work so far as it is in their power to do so. The Pittsburgh Dispatch aptly suggests that none can have a greater interest than the miners that their wages should be fully and honestly paid. Also that the organization of the miners is in a position to exert a powerful influence in favor of the completion of the plan. The Dispatch points out "if the miners make it known that every operator who signs the uniformity agreement, with an additional pledge to pay the district price to be fixed by conference or arbitration, can start his works, the most powerful lever possible will be applied in favor of success, while the miners thus given work at advanced wages can support the strike at mines where the agreement is refused."

This is a commonsense proposition which the miners' leaders should act upon. It would complete a long stride in the direction of better and lasting conditions for the miners and the coal industry. It can work in but one way, and that for the good of all concerned.

Two Kinds of "Calamity Howlers."

The esteemed Intelligencer sees a "calamity howler" these days in every dark corner. The Intelligencer was a rapid calamity howler itself not so very long ago, and it knows how it is. In those days our neighbor was known as "Calamity Jane."

Our neighbor doubtless refers to the attitude of this paper during the panic of four years ago, the effects of which were so disastrous to the whole country and from which we are just now recovering. At that time there was good reason for complaint. The panic followed an election in which there had been chosen to power a party pledged to revolutionize a revenue system which had been the policy of the government for thirty years, and the uneasiness in consequence brought lack of confidence and a panicky feeling generally in financial, manufacturing and trade circles everywhere.

The columns of the papers were filled day after day with long lists of bank failures. No man who owned bank stock or who had his savings on deposit knew when he went to bed at night that the following morning's paper would not bring him the news that all was lost. Factories were closing on every hand and wage-workers, who but the year previous had been more generally employed than at any time in the country's history, were thrown out of employment. Armies of unemployed were marching across country demanding work and presenting all sorts of impossible schemes.

Nothing like it had ever been witnessed in this or any other country. In every manufacturing city, including Wheeling, hundreds of families of workmen were being fed by public subscription. Soup houses and charity stores were established in almost every community. Every one remembers how it was here in Wheeling. Every man knew only too late what had brought on this state of affairs.

It was while this distressful condition prevailed that the Intelligencer was calling attention to the causes. It was telling the truth which came home to all men who had listened to the appeals of the free trade demagogues and precipitated the period of anxiety and panic, and the Register, which was then a partisan of the Cleveland administration and the tariff tinkers, whose title to revolutionize the American protective policy had created the uneasiness, uncertainty and lack of confidence in the future, and while the good citizens of Wheeling were feigning the unemployed, was calling the Intelligencer "Calamity Jane" for calling attention to the logic of the situation. There was calamity on every side, it was here and everybody was suffering from it.

The circumstances are entirely different now. The agitation of financial and other heresies last year, by financiers without finances or experience, had unsettled business and created another period of uncertainty and dread, but the election came, the heresies were defeated and confidence was at once restored. While the country continued, in the very nature of things, to suffer from the depressed effects of the panic of 1893 and the low tariff which had led in millions of dollars worth of foreign products to force American labor out of work and wages, there was a confidence on every hand in the future, because a party was elected to power which did not threaten the stability of our currency and whose tariff legislation never had been in the interest of the foreign manufacturer and against the American producer.

This confidence was the beginning of a steady improvement, which could not reach the flood tide until the disastrous laws were repealed and the policy of the new administration could be put into force. Notwithstanding the depression there was no real calamity. There were no soup houses, no Coxey armies, no public subscriptions to relieve suffering, for, hard as times were, there was no demand for these things. And yet the Bryanite newspapers, for political purposes only, were howling calamity, and sneering at every report of business improvement.

While thoughtful men were thankful that a panic had been averted by the defeat of dishonest money, and were gratified that signs were pointing to a gradual recovery of a patient that had been sick for four years, these organs were continuing their policy of preaching discontent and indulging in pessimistic sneers. Even now, when Providence has blessed the country with abundant crops, and when the agriculturalists are receiving good prices for their products, and prosperity is returning, and western farmers are telegraphing to the man who misled them with his cheap money cry last year to stop his calamity howl; when from manufacturing and trade centres cheering news of an industrial and trade revival is being sent out; when money is being taken from the strong boxes and put into circulation; when there are bright prospects for a prosperous fall trade and steady employment in the mills and factories—even now, with these things going on, and business men, wage workers and farmers are strong with confidence and hope in the future, some of these organs are continuing the calamity howl.

But the cry is growing weaker. There is a lack of enthusiasm in it which indicates that slowly but surely the conviction is being forced on the minds of the Popocratic editors that this great country is entering upon another era of prosperity. There is a difference in pointing out the causes of calamity which actually exists and in howling calamity when the process of recovery is manifest on every hand. In one instance the remedy is pointed out; in the other the work of improvement is retarded by pessimistic ravings.

An Important Gathering.

Elsewhere will be found the official call for the sixth annual session of the National Irrigation Congress. The importance of the work of the congress cannot be underestimated, and the possibilities of the movement are so vast that it almost takes one's breath away. It is not only important to those who live in the west in the vicinity of arid lands, but to the people of the whole country. The object of the movement is to open up and secure arid America for settlement, and means that a district which comprises one-half of the United States, and which now only supports 6,000,000 of people, will be made to furnish homes for a population of 70,000,000.

In a letter received from Chairman Moses, of the executive committee of the congress he outlines the work briefly. The object of the coming convention, he says, is to devise means, and to enact proper laws for the protection of the forests of this region, which means a saving of millions of dollars that now annually go up in fire and smoke through rapine and plunder; to conserve the floodwaters of the Mississippi and its tributaries, and of the other large rivers of arid America means an annual saving to the government of more than $5,000,000, and to the inhabitants of the flooded districts of more than three times as many millions of dollars more, besides opening homes for thousands by the use of these conserved waters. To devise just and equitable laws for the control and distribution of water and on the apportionment of the land in arid districts. These, and many other questions of interest that should command the earnest support of all, north, south, and east, as well as the west, will come before the congress for careful attention and consideration.

The importance of the movement to the entire country is thus made apparent, and the importance of all the states being represented cannot be overestimated. While West Virginia is not in the arid district, her people are interested, for the development of this great territory and the opening of homes for many thousands people means larger markets for West Virginia's coal and other products as has to sell. It is not likely that this state will be unrepresented at the congress, which is to meet at Lincoln, Nebraska.

There is encouragement for the cause of home rule in the news of the reunion of the Irish parties, which have been at loggerheads for so long, much to the embarrassment of the campaign. On the strength of the harmony which now prevails the friends of Ireland in the United States will renew their support, feeling that something substantial may now be accomplished.

The appointment of General Van H. Bukey, of Parkersburg, to the position of distributing agent of the bureau of engraving and printing, was a just recognition of a sterling Republican and citizen. Not only has General Bukey served his party well, but as a soldier in the war for the Union he rendered distinguished services to the country. His appointment was in the nature of a restoration to the government employ, he having been removed from one branch of the service by the Cleveland administration in violation of the law protecting veteran soldiers from removal for political reasons.

Business Improvement.

Bradstreet's weekly review of trade, which the Intelligencer publishes elsewhere, gives the most cheering outlook yet given by that great and conservative commercial agency. A few weeks since Bradstreet's took a slightly pessimistic view of the situation, and, while reporting decided signs of improvement, declared that the steady flow had not yet set in.

Now, however, the agency pronounces the business situation throughout the country as being of the most satisfactory character. There is not an element of it that is not encouraging and agreeable. The report bears out all the most sanguine and optimistic claims as to the steady improvement that is going on.

A United States geographical expert who headed a party that made a thorough investigation of the work done in the Alaska gold region makes a report in which he affirms the most plausible stories of the richness of the field. While it is doubtless true that many of the stories concerning the discoveries are exaggerated, this report clearly indicates that the finds are remarkably rich and that there are large fortunes awaiting many of those who brave the dangers and hardships of the new El Dorado.

Three New Churches.

Special Dispatch to the Intelligencer. MORGANTOWN, W. Va., Aug. 8.—It will not be long until Morgantown will have three new places of worship. The litigation over a bequest to the Baptist congregation has come to an end by a decision in favor of the church, and the handsome new building begun three years ago will be pushed to completion at once. The Lutherans of the town have decided to build as soon as sufficient funds to begin the work are available and the Pittsburgh synod will contribute towards it. The Catholics have a lot and two thousand dollars subscribed and will build at once.

Judge Hagans' Serious Illness.

Special Dispatch to the Intelligencer. MORGANTOWN, W. Va., Aug. 8.—The many friends of Judge J. Marshall Hagans will regret to learn of his continued serious illness. He has been suffering for two years with stomach trouble, and, notwithstanding a long treatment for the complaint by eminent physicians, it has grown worse. He has just returned from Atlantic City, where he went a month ago for a long rest, and is in a weak condition. His splendid services as a jurist are missed in this circuit.

NATIONAL IRRIGATION CONGRESS

To Meet in Lincoln, Neb., Next Month.

An Important Congress. LINCOLN, Neb., Aug. 8.—The following official call for the sixth national irrigation congress, has been issued: To the People of the United States.

Agreeable to the instructions of the Fifth Irrigation Congress, the Sixth Annual Session of the National Irrigation Congress will be held in the city of Lincoln, Neb., September 28, 29 and 30, 1897.

The basis of representation in this body will be as follows:

1. All members of the national executive committee.
2. All members of state and territorial irrigation commissions.
3. Five delegates at large to be appointed by their respective governors, for each of the following states and territories: Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho, Kansas, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Dakota, Texas, Utah, Washington and Wyoming.
4. Three delegates at large for each state and territory not heretofore enumerated to be appointed by the governors of said states and territories; or, in the case of the District of Columbia, by the President.
5. One delegate each from regularly organized irrigation, agricultural and horticultural societies and societies of engineers, irrigation companies, agricultural colleges, and commercial bodies, such as boards of trade, commercial clubs, chambers of commerce, etc.
6. Fully accredited representatives of any foreign nation or colony, each member of the United States senate and house of representatives, and each governor of a state or territory will be admitted as honorary members.

The question for discussion in the national irrigation congress are of vital interest not only to the people of arid and semi-arid America, but to every section of our common country. Each succeeding session has been marked by an increasing interest, intelligence of discussion and broadening of plans looking to the reclamation of the arid west and to the establishment of independent means of livelihood for the millions who are yet homeless in a land of unparalleled resources, with a possible destiny beyond the most extravagant dreams of the optimist. Problems of both national and state legislation are to be considered.

The papers and discussions will emanate from authorities of distinction, who have attained their eminence by practical work, laborious study and philosophic research. Subjects will be assigned with reference to the capabilities of the authors to deal with them in the most thorough manner possible under the time limit necessarily imposed by the programme committee. Every effort possible will be exerted to make this session the greatest in results of any convention in the history of the movement.

The city of Lincoln, the historic capital of Nebraska, with a thrifty and progressive population of 55,000, is making liberal preparation for the royal reception of the thousands who will attend the Congress. The amplest hotel accommodations, at the lowest prices, will be available to all, and the local itinerary will include attractive sight-seeing excursions, visits to state institutions, official receptions and trips to the interior of the state where many of the greatest canals and irrigation works will be inspected and their practical results exhibited.

Railroad rates will not exceed a single fare for the round trip from all points between Chicago and the Pacific Ocean and probably from any place in the United States to the city of the Congress. Details of transportation and ticket limitations will be announced later either by this committee or the railroad officials.

The governors of the various states and territories and all appointing agencies under the call, are especially requested to advise the secretary of the executive committee of the names and addresses of the appointees and correspondence relating to all matters antecedent and preliminary to the Congress will receive prompt attention at the hands of the secretary or the chairman.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars; free.
