ABBOTT "LAID DOWN."

Disappointing End of His Bout with Pearce in the Eleventh Round. Referee Siler Roasted the Englishman-Pearce's Manly Statement. Wanko Bested Carle.

Stanton Abbott in his palmy, days was the champion lightweight boxer of England, and he came to this country in his prime, under the sheltering wing of the late Squire Abingdon. The squire was a true sportsman in the highest sense of the term, but he fell among thieves when he added Jem Hall to his string, the bright particular star of was Charley Mitchell. Last night's flasco at the Metropolitan club tarnishes all the lustre that has been associated with Abbott's name.

associated with Abbott's name.

In his contest with Leslie Pearce, which was to have gone twenty-five rounds, he displayed all the ear-marks of a scientific, hard hitting boxer. For ten rounds his wonderful blocking held off Leslie Pearce's tireless rappings at his stomach. Then in the eleventh round, he deliberately laid down, making a very dismal failure at tening to round, he deliberately hild down, making a very dismal fallure at trying to appear knocked out. He disgusted Pearce, Referce George Siler, of Chicago, and his former admirets who had paid their hard-earned cash to see him give them a run for their money.

The ten rounds displayed some nice work. Abbott contented himself with blocking, at which he was a past master, and he had several layers of beef on his naugh that needed notesting.

work. Abbott contented himself with blocking, at which he was a past master, and he had several layers of beef on his paunch that needed protecting. He was too fat in the first place, yet he sicceeded in préventing Pearce. Irom doing much damage. In the last round he let up on his guards. Pearce was quick to close in, but when Abbott dropped he wasn't knocked out, and his ruse was so much like a fake that the crowd was "on" right dawy.

Siler started to count, and Abbott crawled to his feet at the sound of "aine." He tried his best to appear gregy. Pearce handed in some more hot ones, and down goes Abbott with a grunt. Siler's countenance was a picture of disgust. While he was counting the fakir gotup. Pearcecame at him and he flopped over on his face on the mat. Siler waved his hands and waiked to the ropes, Abbott in the meantime reclining on the floor. The crowd hootel and hissed the prostrate quitter.

There were calls for Siler, and that cold and suave official responded. He said: "In thirty years of experience with boxing affairs, this is the worst I've ever seen. Abbott was not knockel out. The club may do as it sees fit about paying him any money." Siler then gave the decision to Pearce.

Lesile felt the queer ending worse than the most disappointed man there, said he, "as I thought, to box honestly, and I had no idea that he would lay down. He didn't come at me or make a sand at any stage so I could fight him, filough I tried my hardest to make him fight. Now, just to show that I'm willing to do what's right, I'll fight liften rounds with Jack Donavan, or any man at the weight in the house, right now."

At this onnouncement every man in the louse cheered enthusiastically, and At this announcement every man in now."

At this announcement every man in the house cheered enthusiastically, and Pearce stock, which has always been high, went up several notches higher. The crowd then sat down prepared to see Mr. Donovan, of Cleveland, who before the contest started, challenged the winner, come forward, but Mr. Donovan came not. Mr. Donovan, it will be remembered, threw up the sponge very queerly about two years ago, when opposed to Jeff Powers, also of Cleveland. Abbott then eraved an audience, and it was some time before the disgust hetrated gave way to attention. He made a sorry face of it, as he said: "I just want to say that hit's lifteen months since Hive been hin the ring. The last time was hin Baltimore, where I broke me 'and. Hi tried to hextend myself to left has good has Hi could, hand Leslie Pearce has proved himself to be the best man."

fortunate in its last few contests, and last night secured what it thought would be a splendld card, and it was no fault of the club's that it turned out so disastrought. disastrousis. In order to ensure satis-factory work, the club paid Referee Si-ler $100 and expenses for his services, Abbatt's record didn't give the slightest inkling of his doing such a rick. money would have been taken advantage of by the club, only for the fact that a contract had been signed whereby there was a loser's end, and since Siler had declared Pearce the winner, there was no way of holding back Abbott's portion. The club will likely try to protect itself in future from men of the Abbott stamp.

A description of the contest as it proceeded would be but a repetition of one man doing all the leading and doing his utmost to batter down his opponent's guards. But the Englishman was a blocker of the first water, and Pearce couldn't find his stomach to much advantage. Lestle gave him stinging jabs and escaped without return, but while Abbott looked like a lobster he knew the game. Every round was full of nice work, Pearce's fast work was never excelled here, and he got under all of Abbott's swings, at the same time throwing in both hands to Abbott's body. Until the eleventh round the crowd admired the work, which was certainly scientific. Then Abbott's lay down came and disgust religing a supreme.

As was predicted, the preliminary was a farm one. Wanko got the decision and it went the limit of six rounds. Carle was all but out in the last round and was very weak in the lifth, and he just fought to save himself in these rounds. He cit quite a figure in the first and second rounds, but a stomach punch weakened him. He was game and took an awful drubbing, and he was loudly cheered for his good showing.

The Fight Was Stopped.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Feb. 27. - John Finnegan and Mike Creedon met in the Homestead opera house to-night for twenty-round boxing contest, but the bout lasted but five rounds, when Rebout lasted but five rounds, when Referree Billy Corcoran gave the decision to Finnegan. Neither man seemed to have much advantage up to the beginning of the fourth round, in which Finnessan foughts his man savagely, rushing him to the ropes frequently. In the fifth round Creedon, who was weak, was pounded until he blied freely at the mouth, nose and ears. The referee other stopped the fight.

The Wheeling team will be ordered to report on April 5 for practice, and the first exhibition game, so far as now arranged, will be played on April 12 and 13, when the Detroits, of the Western league, will cross bats with the Nailers.

President Barrow, of the Atlantic league, who mahaged the Wheelings in 1855, writes to President Howell, congratulating Wheeling upon her reappearance in the domain of professional base ball. He also tok occasion to recommend a first baseman, Angy Morgan, who played on Sharsig's Athelites, of the Atlantic league, and with a New York state league team last year.

Irve Brodie, the Wheeling ball player, who is under reserve to Fort Wayne, has received a contract from that club, but he has not yet signed the document, preferring to await developments for a few days.

A letter was received by "Pop" Lytle yesterday from the New Castle club, in which they insist that Lytle shall continue as manager of their club. Lytle, however, is determined to hold to his determination to play with Wheeling, and as New Castle entered into no contract with him last season, they have no claim upon him now.

Now if Columbus could only jump in and Fort Wayne pull out, and some good city take the place of Grand Itapids, the Inter-State would be a record-breaker more than ever.
