ARMY OF THE POTOMAC.

Signs of a flovement by Lee-Fight-ing Qualities of Virginia Soldiers, Etc., Etc. BEFORE PETERSBURG, Feb. 28, 1865.

Special Correspondence Washington Chronicle. This is the day we expected the rebels o evacuate Petersburg. Dame Rumor through her countless mediams-the deserters—said General Lee had issued private orders for the destruction of all tobacco, cotton, and other articles or materials that might be of service of the Yankees. The ruin was to be performed secretly and with despatch. From the present.

I cannot see that Petersburg has been evacuated. A long ride this morning among our targled and crooked earthworks has proved this fact very distinctly to my understanding. The rebels swarmed upon the parapet, pseped through embra-sures, or leaned idly against the gabions in the fortifications. Groups were idly sunning themselves upon an elevated bomb-proof, while others clustered together, and, with spade and pick, were intent upon repairing the damage done the works by wind and rain.

There is no doubt many of their heavy pieces of artillery have been removed, and field batteries substituted. This is a precautionary measure, for which they may soon be very thankful. A man came in the other night, who represented himself to have been aguard on the pontoon bridge over the Appomattox, and that while on duty there one night, he counted sixty pieces of cannon cross the stream. What does Lee mean to do? I can easi ly guess what would give him infinite sat-isfaction—to defeat Grant, and humiliate Sherman. Can be do either? By leaving a strong skirmish line, be might possibly be able to withdraw sufficient force from our front to severely damage Sherman.— This course would be much safer for him than to brave our breastworks, against which his men would never be able to ef fect a breach. At present the army of Concentration is the consummation for which we wish devoutely. Let Schofield, Sherman, and Grant combine, and the rain of the Confederacy will be certain and irretrievable. No one feels this fact more painfully than the rebel generalissimo. So it is not natural to think he will furnish Sherman with a sligh diversion before Richmond is vacated and shelter craved in the works of Lynchburg.

More than two years ago, when Richmond was beleagued by the troops under McClellan, Lee i sued a military edict, intended for a sedative to the nervous and over-anxious ones of the city. If that place should have to be abandoned, then there were other places within the borders of his native State where good defence could be made, and strong blows given for deliverance. On this unhappy occasion he informed the people and the soldiers that his "lest battle should be fought upon the last hills of Virginia."

Did he wish us to understand that his State offered more natural qualification for defence and fortification than any other in the South? I think not. The idea con veyed is that no spirit to fight could're main, if driven from his home. All the Virginians in his army think the same way. Palmetto Guards, Mississippi Raugets, Texan Braves, or Lousiana Tiggrs—what are they? Men, men, men—and miserable soldiers they proved. We have found no difficulty in vanquishing any command with a fierce-sounding, bloody name, But, whenever Viscoins. whenever Virginia soldiers have confronted ours, the tug of war has been deadly Of this state her soldiers can exclaim:

"Alss! poor country! it cannot Be called our mother, but our graves."

It is quite natural, then, with such

As men come through this ordeal, so will they fight. The love of life, the dread of the awful future on whose very verge they stand, the instinctive shrinking from danger, the thought of home and friends, are felt at that instant with an intensity.

but it is a life of shame and dishonor.

As it is with armies, so it is with nations. When a people resolve on war they must be prepared to meet all its consequences. If, in the bour of peril, they paries with fear, they are lost. Calm, self-possessed resolution, erising from the convertible. possessed resolution, arising from the conviction that the object they seek to gain is worth all they may be required to give for it, is the only guarantee of success. Disaster and defeat inspire such a people with new determination instead of filling them with despense on the clearer contemplation. same gentry we have numerous other stories with despondency. The clearer contemplation of the fate they would avert only nerves them to greater efforts.

It does not seem inappropriate to suggest to our people, in the present crisis, some of the reflections with which the brave soldier encourages himself in battle, and quiets the suggestions of apprehension and alarm. They are submitted with the hope that they will serve to dispel some of the fears that timidity, the love of ease and proper ty, or scoret hostilly to our cause, so in-

The eve of battle, every soldier knows, is full of all kinds of startling rumors and reports. The strongth of the enemy is then always exaggerated, his movements and designs are misrepresented, and dangers magnified, or even invented. magnified, or even invented.

Such seems to be the case with the people of the confederacyat this time. The air is filled with alarming rumors; every fear has found a voice and everything is open to the tale it tells. Measures of precaution are construed to pressee disaster. When the wagons and sick are ordered to the real it is found to the real it. the rear it is inferred that the army is about to retreat. It is time to proclaim order in the ranks and give the reassuring command, "Steady!" Let every man return to his post and give all his energy to the performance of his daty, while he listens to the words of encouragement from the soldiers in the front. Regard all street rumors as the soldiers do those of the camp. They know that none of the latter are wholly true, and most of them entirely They know that none of the latter Northern Virginia would have a better chance for victory in a race; it is not so full of fight now as last spring.

Concentration is the consummation for evidence in support of it would fail to convince a rational and cool man of the least important fact. Measures of precaution do not indicate doubt of success. To take off one's clothes before going into the water does not prove that one expects to be drowned. Every encumbrance must be sent to the rear before the battle, however secure the victory may be. The real danger is always less than imagination represents it to be. Look steadily at a ghost and it will vanish. Danger affects the enemy as much as it does us. If we feel like retreating if pressed, we may be very certain, that he will do the same if we press him. We should not forget, in dwelling upon our own difficulties and embarrassments, that the enemy has his also. The issue of battle is not in the hands of man. An apparently trifling circumstance has often defeated the combinations of skill and the power of numbers and resources. In the words of the old Scotch version:—

The race is not to him that's got The longest legs to run,

The President's Inaugural Address. WASHINGTON, March 4 .- Fellow Country men: -At this second appearing to take the oath of 'the Presidential office, there is less occasion for an extended address than there was at the first. Then a statement somewhat in detail of a course to be pur-sued, seemed very fitting and proper. Now, at the expiration of four years, during which public declarations have been constantly called forth on every point and phase of the great contest which still absorbs the attention and engrosses the enargles of the nation, little that is new can be presented. The progress of our arms, upon which all else chiefly depends, is as well known to else chiefly depends, is as well known to the public as to myself, and it is, I trust, reasonably satisfactory and encouraging to all. With high hope for the future, no prediction in regard to it is ventured. Un the occasion corresponding to this four years ago, all thoughts were anxiously directed to an impending civil war; all decried, all sought to avoid it. While the inaugural address was being delivered from this place, devoted altogether to having the Union without war, insurgent agents were in the city seeking to destroy it without war; seeking to dissolve fe2-td gent agents were in the city scening to dissolve stroy it without war; seeking to dissolve the Union and divide the effects by negotiation. Both parties deprecated war; but one of these would make war rather than let the nation survive, and the other would accept war rather than let it perish-and thus the war came. One-eighth of the whole population were colored. Slavery was not distributed generally over the Union, but localized in the southern part of it. That slavery constituted a peculiar and powerful interest; all know that this interest was some how the cause of the war; to strength-en, perpetuate and extend this interest was the object for which the insurgents would read the Union by war, while the govern-ment claimed no right to do more than to restrict the territorial calargement of it.— Neither party expected from the war the magnitude or the duration which it has already attained. Neither anticipated that the cause of the conflict. might cease, still less even before the conflict itself should cease. Each looked for an easier triumph and a result less fundamental and astounding. Both read the same Bible, and prayed to the same God, and each invoked His aid against the other. It may seem strange that any men should dare to ask a just God's assistance in wringing their bread from the assistance in wringing their bread from the sweat of other men's brows. But "judge not that we be not judged." The prayers of both could not be answered, that of neither has been answered fully. The Almighty has His own purpose. Woe not the world because of offenses, for it must needs be that offenses come, but woe to that man by whom the offense cometh. that man by whom the offense cometh. If we shall suppose that American slavery is one of the so-called offenses which in the providence of God must needs come, but which having continued through his shall we not discern that He gives to both North and South this terrible war as due to shall we not discern that He gives to both North and South this terrible war as due to so, those by whom the effense came. Is there any departure from the divine attributes which the believers in a living God always ascribe to him? Fondly do we hope, fervently do we pray, that this mighty scourge of war may speedily pass away. Yet iff ant God wills that it continue until all the ent wealth piled by the bondmen's two hundred and fifty years of unrequited toil shall be ton, sunk, and until every drop of blood drawn with the lash shall be paid by another drawn with the sword, still it must be said, as was said three thousand years ago. that the ju gements of the Lord are true and righteous altogether. With malice towards none, with charity for all, with firmness in the right as God gives us to see the right.
