CRIMSON AND BURR CLOVERS, WINTER VETCH

Farming in the South will never become profitable until our lands are made rich. Soil building should be the aim of every farmer. Soil building is no easy job, neither can it be done in a year or two. It takes time to build up land, but it is possible to do it. With the boll weevil threatening us and the shortage of labor now facing us, we will be forced to change our present method of farming. There is but one solution to the problem—that of diversification and the use of improved farm machinery and the building up of our lands so that we can double our present yield. Yields of 15 bushels of corn and one third of a bale of cotton to the acre does not pay, yet these are the average yields for the Cotton Belt. By following a systematic rotation of crops, so that a legume, (cow peas, velvet bean or clover) can be turned under every two or three years, our lands would be making 30 or 40 bushels of corn and nearly a bale of cotton to the acre. A good growth of clover turned under would add $25 worth of plant food to the soil in addition to the amount of humus added, thereby making the land hold more water and more responsive to commercial fertilizers. Yet the farmer would have to invest $5.00 in seed and a little extra labor for the sowing of the seed and turning the clover under for each acre planted.

FEEDING SPECIAL FLOCKS.

Clemson College, Sept. 30.—The production of pure-bred poultry, eggs for hatching, and baby chicks, is becoming an important industry in South Carolina. In 1917 the South Carolina Poultry Breeders' Association was organized, and since that time a State Poultry Show, recognized as the official state show by the American Poultry Association, has been held each year.

These breeders of pure-bred poultry produce stock of the highest quality, which they intelligently house, feed, and care for. They exhibit their best birds at county fairs and poultry shows, advertise and sell at good prices their eggs for hatching, baby chicks, and surplus breeding and show stock, and generally find the poultry business profitable.
