Edgefield, South Carolina

A Trip Through New England.

generation. At the foot of this mountain is a large hotel and cottages surrounding, one of them a replica of Mount Vernon. The state of New Hampshire has recently gone to the expense and trouble of putting reinforcements and iron bars through the granite that supports this face, that no time or storm may mar its future beauty and symmetry.

Another time of great pleasure to me was when we drove out to the different places of interest where my relatives had lived. The old home is still standing where my grandmother, Lydia Gile was born and from which she came to South Carolina. This home was built one hundred and ten years ago and is in a perfect state of preservation in every way, typical of the early New England home with no front porch, several stories high and everything under one roof, the home and covered sheds adjoining for carriages, sleighs, farm implements and cattle so that in winter the family wont have to go out of the house. I noticed that everywhere on the farms, or in most places, this was the case. The barns were larger than their homes and you could see the name of the farm such as "Brookside," always over the barn very large and conspicuous. The home would be connected with this by a covered way or built together. This looked very queer to me, as we have our barns as far from the house as we can get them.

I was interested in the maple orchards, one of which my cousin, Mrs. Weller owned, and from which the syrup for this season had already been made. One tree had made this spring one gallon of syrup, which they said was a large quantity. This extraction of the syrup or sap as it is at first, does not injure the tree, and they are tapped for an indefinite number of years at the proper season. I was told that they use or sell the syrup for which there is great demand and not so much sugar is made as formerly, but during the war they were not so deprived of sugar as we, because in emergency they could make and use the maple sugar. I told them we used maple syrup for sugar during the war, and they said if it was bought even in Boston the New Hampshire maple syrup was hardly recognizable, so adulterated did it become. I soon had this fact demonstrated to me, when my cousin brought in some real maple syrup from her farm near by. It is of a darker color and much thicker than the Log Cabin Maple syrup so extensively advertised.

We visited the old cemetery in the meadow, as our cousins expressed it, and there I saw the graves of my great grandmother and father, Lydia Clement and John Gile, who were among the early settlers and builders of this beautiful mountain town. We visited another cousin, Mrs. Martha Gile Lewis, who told us some interesting stories in connection with the early days. Our home was with the dear cousins, Mr. and Mrs. R. T. Gile who have promised to come and make us a visit next spring. They expressed fear at coming South as late as May, but if the weather continues as cold as it is now they might safely remain until June in South Carolina.

One day of our stay in New Hampshire was spent with Mr. and Mrs. Sleeper, at Lancaster, about twenty miles north east of Littleton, taking lunch and dinner with these hospitable friends whom I had never seen. In fact, from Washington to Boston and to the most distant point we visited and back again to Washington, I did not see the face of any person I had ever seen before.

The serving of meals was of great interest because we were always ready for the time to come, and everything was a surprise to us. There is as much equipment in the Northern kitchen as in the business office of the man of the house. No wonder the women can accomplish so much with such apparent ease. Florence said to me one day "How is it that in all the cooking, there is never failure on any article of food? Each thing served is a complete success.

In the afternoon at Lancaster we were taken out across the Connecticut river on which the town is located, into Vermont and saw there a beautiful view of this lovely clear river, the mountains and the town nestling between. All the rivers in New England are so clear that you can see the reflection of everything which is above. The banks are low, the water being in touch of the hand from either side, and the grass a beautiful green everywhere. The cattle and chickens had just been released from their long snow bound winter quarters and were happily partaking of the grass as the snow had but recently disappeared.

The people of New England are as charmingly hospitable as our own Southern people are. The only lack north or south is the difficulty of securing sufficient help in doing the household work. People are alike everywhere and the spirit of hospitality which is taught in the Scriptures and is a Christian grace, belongs to those who love the Lord whether of the North or South, East or West, of all creeds and tongues.

The end of this Perfect Day was the journey of twelve hours from Littleton to New York. This time we selected still another route, coming down the Connecticut river through the mountains of New Hampshire on one side and the mountains of Vermont on the other, sometimes traveling in one state and sometimes in the other, enjoying the mountain scenery until we were about half way down the length of central Massachusetts. At Springfield we made a change to the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad and as the darkness gathered came into the great metropolis of New York.

Charming Party Given by Mrs. L. B. Jones and Mrs. A. T. Samuel.

Scarcely is there ever recorded a more unique party than the one given on May the twenty-first by Mrs. L. B. Jones and Mrs. A. T. Samuel, at the spacious colonial residence of Mr. and Mrs. B. B. Jones on Main Street.

The occasion was planned in honor of the bridal party of Mr. and Mrs. Braxton Bragg Jones, whose marriage occurred February 27, 1895, and the lovely daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jones, whose marriage to Mr. Thomas Lawrence Nicholson of Chicago is to be consummated June 3rd.

The resident members of Miss Jones' bridal party and the husbands and wives of the 1895 bridal party were included in the guests on this interesting evening.

Mr. and Mrs. L. B. Jones, Mrs. A. T. Samuel and Mr. Ralph Jones received in the wide hall.

The handsome west parlor was arranged as a smoker for the gentlemen and they were requested to write advice for the groom of 1920, while in the east parlor opposite, the ladies were writing advice for the bride elect.

The reading of all this sage advice occasioned much merriment. Mr. Lovick Smith was awarded the trophy for writing the best advice from the gentlemen and Mrs. Lovick Smith was given the prize for giving the best advice among the ladies.

An attractive program had been arranged, including, among the musical numbers, "Love's Old Sweet Song," sung as a solo by Miss Clara Sawyer, of Johnston.

The dances of little Miss Winks Bailey and Miss Elise Lake were exquisitely graceful and, as always, received many encores.

Master Allen Samuel, Jr., presented the souvenirs of the evening—quaint little colonial couples, dancing the stately minuet, for each lady and friendly pipes to the gentlemen.

Mrs. J. H. Cantelou and Mr. N. M. Jones, maid of honor and best man at the marriage of 1895, presented a beautiful framed photograph of this bridal party of her parents to Miss Jones.

Mr. J. H. Cantelou, in a most pleasing manner, gave the popular bride a very handsome silver vase, the gift of the wedding party of her mother.

Mrs. A. T. Samuel's most acceptable souvenir of her elaborate party for the bride was a wonderful cook book with much valuable advice in rhyme.

Delicious refreshments, in two courses were served—an elaborate salad course with iced tea, and block cream with fruit cake and mints.

Mrs. Lovick Smith presided over the bride's book on this distinctly delightful occasion. Mrs. Augustus Corley presented each bride's maid of 1895, as she registered, a lavender sachet bag, which Mrs. B. B. Jones had made from the exquisite materials of her daughter's trousseau.

There was only one member of the bridal party of 1895 missing—Mr. R. L. Fox, of Charlotte, N. C., and he sent the following telegraphic message to the bride: "My congratulations to the wedding party of 1895. My love to the bride of 1920."

Possibly in all the pages of Miss Jones' wedding memories there will be no more treasured one than that on which her parents' wedding party registered—just as they stood on the memorable 27th of February, 1895—while on the opposite page, their husbands and wives registered.

The 1895 bridal party record was as follows:

N. M. Jones—Tweetie Hill Cantelou
R. L. Fox—Lilla Hill Ready.
S. M. Smith—Clara Sawyer.
Dr. F. W. P. Butler—Hettie Shepard Brown.
E. J. Norris—Gertrude Strom Thurmond.

Flower girl and boy—Lizzielou Jones Samuel and L. Ralph Jones.

Red Hill News.

Our school will close on the 4th of June. We are going to have a picnic with plays, drills and a few recitations and hope to have some good speakers from Edgefield. In behalf of our school will extend a hearty welcome to everybody.

We had a large attendance at Sunday school last Sunday. Several visitors from Cleora and Edgefield. We were very glad to have them. Come again on service days, 1st, 2nd and 3rd Sundays, and hear our pastor, Mr. Barnes. I know you will like him. He is the right man in the right place.

Mr. and Mrs. Tom Williams, little Arthur and the "only baby" went visiting last Sunday.
Mrs. L. J. McClendon spent several days with her niece, Mrs. Edd Strom, last week.

You can hear the farmers from early morn until late at night, and the crops are growing now. They have hopes of making a good crop, if not cut off by the boll weevil.
