

Catching the Train.

The following story is told by the Rev. J. Hyatt Smith.

We stopped at Syracuse, N. Y., for dinner. You remember the railroad depot, centrally situated, with its Eastern and Western entrances exactly alike—as much as the ends of a car. After we had dined, the depot-master informed me that we had seventeen minutes to spare before the departure of the Eastern train. This thought I, will give me an opportunity to see the city and a glorious chance for a smoke, provided a clergyman could be tempted into such a wasteful and worldly amusement. I snatched forth, and after an absence of exactly thirteen minutes, having enjoyed a delightful and soothing stroll, I was leisurely returning, watch in hand, when, to my sudden astonishment, I beheld the train slowly gliding out of the other end of the depot and increasing its speed at every puff of the gigantic locomotive.

Here, indeed, was a "call" which admitted neither correspondence nor delay; there was no time for "taking into consideration."

So, without conferring with flesh and blood, I put like a sky-rocket with double force. For a moment I thought I was gaining ground, although I knew I was losing wind. I was encouraged in the race by sundry helpful fellows who kept crying out as I passed, "Go it, gaitors!" "Flucky boy!" "Ho, sn't left, oh, no!" and well-meaning and benignant exhortations. Though they intended, perhaps, to help me over the course, I found that the more they shouted the less I was inclined to run, and more decidedly did the locomotive make its terrible way against me.

To give up the chase, to submit to the chagrin of being left to lose my party and my passage, meet with disappointment and not to meet my friends—all this was enough; but the thoughts of encountering all the way back to the depot, that line of interested individuals who with their cheering exclamations, had so feelingly encouraged me on my outward journey, this was the bitterest pill in the unexpected dose.

But it must be done. So, tapering off gradually, I gave up the contest and turned back to meet my fate, and if I could find him, the depot-master, whose blundering statements were the cause of all my trouble. Without search that individual advanced to meet me with the bland recognition of a fact that nobody could well deny.

"Well, you got left, did you?"

I replied only with the resentment of a "dancing eye." If I looked as I tried to look, my photograph taken at that instant would hardly be chosen to grace an album gallery of "omnient divines."

Several bystanders, seeking information, asked with a show of confidential interest in my case, in what way the thing had happened; and others, wishing to point a moral, and advised me to be on hand a little earlier next time.

With returning breath, relief and we came together, and I squarely eloped the railroad official with all the blame. I spoke of his incompetence in no measurable terms, recalling how, after I had placed my party in a car, he had assured me that there were full seventeen minutes to spare before the train went out. "Well here," said I, with a triumphant exhibition of my watch, "the seventeen minutes are even now barely up, and yet the train is gone out of sight."

"After much hot shot east back and forth, with the usual variations and final perorations of a 'you did,' and 'you didn't,' 'you're another,' etc., I asked him whether I would be risking another chance of being left if I depended on him to give me the exact hour of the departure of the next Eastern train."

"Eastern?" exclaimed he.

"Yes, Eastern," I replied, with a decidedly upward and sarcastic inflection.

"Why," quoth he, "the train you've just been chasing with such good luck wasn't the Eastern train, but the Western Express."

With such interesting confusion and excitement, I stammered out, "Then, where, in Jobba, is the Eastern train?"

"Why, the-o-way," he replied, "just getting under way, at the other end of the depot; log it or you'll lose it."

If ever I made Dexter time, I made it then. I passed right through the depot like the wind. I felt as if I was all legs. One glance, however, at the rear door of the last car as I was nearing it came near being too much for me. I discovered the group of my long-lost friends whose forms and faces seemed bursting with poorly suppressed and ill-timed mirth.

As I reached safely the platform the fire that opened upon me could only be equalled, for its morose effect, by the fire in the rear, from which I had providentially fled. I heard jokes, jokes and jeers. I heard the hoarse laughter of full-throated men, and the hysterical efforts of mirth-exhausting women. They had all witnessed my chase after the wrong train; now fearful lest I should overtake it, and then rejoicing at my evident lack of what jokers call "bottom," as my speed began to slacken and my chances with the locomotive to grow "small by degrees and beautifully less." They had witnessed the blowing-up administered by the depot-master, the strange prostration in starting for the right train until at length it had actually started, and I had entered upon a second "stern chase." Then they feared that I was left again, as they looked with breathless interest at the un-qual contest of legs versus locomotive. They had witnessed my final triumph; but how grateful I was welcomed, and with what feelings I received their peculiar congratulations, I leave my hearers to imagine.
