The delicate thoughts that cannot find expression
For ruder speech too fair;
That, like thy petals, tremble in possession,
And scatter on the air.

The miner pauses in his rugged labor,
And leaning on his spade,
Laughing'y calls unto his comrade neighbor
To see thy charms displayed.

But in his eye a mist unwonted rises, And for a moment clear, Some sweet home face his foolish thought sur-

And pauses in a tear-Some boyish vision of his Eastern village, Of uneventful toil, Where golden harvests followed quiet tillage

Above a peaceful soil. One moment only, for the pick uplifting
Throagh root and fibre cleaves,
And on the mu-tly current slowly drifting,
Are swept the bruised leaves.

And yet, 0, poet, in thy homely fashion Thy work thou dost fuffi; For in the turbid current of his passion Thy face is shining still!
