Mortality Among the Negroes.

Western newspapers, in their usual flow of Southern reports, frequently state that the negroes are dying inidustrialized and moral conditions of the negroes in the Southern States. We also find that there are 176,000 of these people in and around the city of Charlestown, and that the negroes are living in the most miserable state of destitution. The official reports with reference to the mortality among the negroes, also discloses the same state of things where the negroes are in the military service of the United States.

The Herald arrives at the conclusion that the negroes will entirely disappear from the effect of great changes in the manner of living. They are rapidly disappearing from these conditions of life, as they were once found in great numbers. Their miseries, if any, of the occupation of the negroes, is to a great extent, larceny, murder, and other crimes. They are doing out of the way. Carefully prepared plans are made to destroy the negro, show that the mortality of the free negro is far greater than the birth. In about 15 years, the colored population increased the number of births ten to twenty times.

What Shall Be Done With Him?

Regarding the negro, an article in the Southern States—what shall be done with him? Shall we adopt the policy of extermination? By that policy, happy, dignified, and prosperous, and a community of their own. But the negro is a different creature. The state of life in which he is placed is not the result of the operation of natural forces, but is unfortunate in the extreme. The mortality from this cause is enormous.
