The recent Democratic Convention, so-called, which assembled here, has borne fruit. Whether it is of the Dead Sea order or not, remains to be tested. Upon the Republican platform, to the extent of conceding qualified suffrage to the colored man, clubs have been organized in many localities in every one of the twenty-four Districts represented in that Convention, and the work still goes on. A very considerable number of the respectable colored men of Columbia have likewise formed a Democratic club, and similar organizations exist in other localities. The members know each other by a peculiar exist in other localities. The members know each other by a peculiar sign and pass-word, and it is designed to give each one on joining, a handsome certificate, stating the fact, and recommending him to the consideration of the community.

Facts, statistics and opinions are gathered and forwarded to Washinggathered and forwarded to Washington, to strengthen, if possible, the protest made in person by the committee during their late visit to the capital. It cannot be said that material benefit has accrued to ourselves as the result of this visit, but the gentlemen composing the committee are satisfied that they have done the public special service, in laying our The diversity of opinion admission of Arkansas is becoming more marked, and the probabilities of her admission over a veto is decreasing. No Republicans object to the Constitution itself, and the points of difficulty apply to all the Southern States.

I am unable to mention with certainty the name of any other person. The representation of South Carolina in that Convention by gentlemen of too great an eminence—especially a greatness attained by their hearty identification with our cause during the war—however much it may satisfy ourselves, will, it is feared, do more harm than good.

to the National Convention, expressed the hope that those comparatively unknown at the North would be sent thither, in preference to the famous men whom we delight to honor, but who on that occasion would become the target of vituperation, and by taking an active part in deliberations, actually become a thorn in the side of the Democratic party. There are many who believe we should refrain from seeking any alliance of the sort, until the platform has been framed by the North and West.
