What the Queen has Seen

"Crowned heads hold a low place in the scale of longevity." If the French author of this ex pression had foreseen Victoria, his assertion would not have been quite so sweeping. England's queen, horn eighty years ago, span of years. She has gone much further beyond the average official life of the world's crown wearers. Sixty-there years will have passed ou June 20th, since she assumed the throne. This exceeds in duration by over two years the reign of her grandfather, George III., hitherto unexampled in British annals. No other monarch of a great nation in the world's history has been on the throne as long, except Louis XIV., of France-seventy-two years—and he was only five years of age when he became titular king, and during his minority his mother ruled in his stead as regent. Victoria, however, was eighteen at the time her predecessor died, and she has exerted sway ever since.

Victoria during her lifetime has seen the entire world transformed. On the day of her birth, May 24, 1819, the first steamboat which ever crossed the Atlantic or any other ocean started from Savannah for Liverpool, making the voyage in twenty-six days. The same distance is now made in less than six. She was six years of age when the first railway train in the world started to carry passengers. She was eighteen years of age, and had just ascended the throne, when the Morse system of telegraphy and that of Cooke and Wheatstone were first patented. Thirty-nine years of her life had passed when the first cable was laid under the Atlantic, and that one almost immediately ceased to operate. Fifty-six years of it expired before the first telephone went into practical operation.

Scott and Byron were in their prime when Victoria first began to read the printed page. None of the great writers-Thackeray, Dickens, Bulwer-Lytton, Tennyson, George Eliott, the Brownings, and the others whose names have cast a glory over her country during the past half or twothirds of a century-had yet begun to work. Darwin, whose labors have revolutionized science, and have profoundly affected the thought of moralists and theologians, was yet unheard of.

At the time of Victoria's birth, the tramp of Bonaparte's armies had just ceased to shake the world, and Bonaparte himself was a prisoner on a British Island in the South Atlantic. She has seen every throne in Europe vacated many times. She has seen her own country transformed politically from an oligarchy, in which one out of fifty of the population was permitted to vote, into a democracy, in which the voters number one out of six of the inhabitants. France has changed its form of government four times since her early girlhood days. Italy, then only a "geographical expression," to use Metternich's phrase, has since become one of the great powers of Europe, while the Empire of Germany was still far in the future.

The United States was in the midst of the "era of good feeling" when Victoria was born. Monroe of the west, Chicago. The annex- consumption. Mexico, California and Alaska, store. to say nothing of the more recent accessions of territory, all came since Victoria's birth. The world's map has been changed in many places, the world's ideals have been altered in many respects, tracted attention to proprietary medicines, and there is a marked disposition to draw a sharp line of distinction between mysterious nostrums and worthy articles of scientific compound and known character.

"Many proprietary medicines," says a leading physician, "are the best possible prescriptions for the diseases which they are made to cure. It is certainly only reasonable to expect that chemists of o world-wide reputation and unlimited resources ought to make compounds with exceptional skill, and it is manifestly to their interest to have their ingredients fresh and pure. Take, for example, Lippman's great remedy, popularly known as P. P. P. The formula is on every bottle. Every physician knows that the ingredients are the best possible remedies for purifying the blood, and the compound is a scientific one, which increases the efficiency of the whole. I sometimes prescribe special mixtures for Blood Poisoning, Scrofulous Affections, Catarrh, Eczema and other complaints arising from impure and weal blood, but I always feel safest in prescribing P. P. P., especially where I am not personally acquainted with the druggist. In prescribing P. P. (Lippman's Great Remedy), I know I am taking no chances." When doctors feel such confidence in a standard remedy, it is
