

LESSONS FROM EHUD.

Dr. Talmage on the Subject of Israel's Deliverer.

His Divine Commission to Destroy an Oppressor—Denunciation of Worshipers of Mammon, Who Scoff at Sin.

[Washington, Jan. 22. Copyright, 1899.]

From a scene in ancient story Dr. Talmage in this discourse draws lessons as appropriate for this time as they were appropriate for the time when the event occurred many centuries ago; text, Judges, 3:15, "But when the children of Israel cried unto the Lord, the Lord raised them up a deliverer. Ehud, the son of Gera, a Benjamite, a man left-handed; and by him the children of Israel sent a present unto Eglon, the king of Moab."

Ehud was a ruler in Israel. He was left-handed, and what was peculiar about the tribe of Benjamin, to which he belonged, there were in it 700 left-handed men, and yet so dextrous had they all become in the use of the left hand that the Bible says they could sling stones at a hairbreadth and not miss. Well, there was a king by the name of Eglon, who was an oppressor of Israel. He imposed upon them a most outrageous tax. Ehud, the man of whom I first spoke, had a Divine commission to destroy that oppressor. He came pretending that he was going to pay the tax, and asked to see King Eglon. He was told he was in the summer house, the place to which the king retired when it was too hot to sit in the palace. This summer house was a place surrounded by flowers and trees and springing fountains and warbling birds. Ehud entered the summer house and said to King Eglon that he had a secret errand with him. Immediately all the attendants were waved out of the royal presence. King Eglon rises up to receive the messenger. Ehud, the left-handed man, puts his left hand to his right side, pulls out a dagger and thrusts Eglon through until the haft went in after the blade. Eglon falls and Ehud comes forth to blow a trumpet of liberty amid the mountains of Ephraim, and a great host is marshaled, and proud Moab submits to the conqueror, and Israel is free. So, O Lord, let all Thine enemies perish! So, O Lord, let all Thy friends triumph!

I learn first from this subject the power of left-handed men. There are some men who, by physical organization, have as much strength in their left hand as in their right hand, but there is something in the writing of this text which implies that Ehud had some defect in his right hand which compelled him to use his left. Oh, the power of left-handed men! Genius is often self-observant, careful of itself, not given to much toil, burning incense to its own aggrandizement, while many a man, with no natural endowments, actually defective in physical and mental organization, has an earnestness for the right, patient industry, an all-consuming perseverance, which achieve marvels for the kingdom of Christ. Though left-handed, as Ehud, they can strike down a sin as great and imperial as Eglon.

I have seen men of wealth gathering about them all their treasures, snuffing at the cause of a world lying in wickedness, roughly ordering Lazarus off their doorstep, sending their dogs, not to lick his sores, but to hound him off their premises; catching all the pure rain of God's blessing into the stagnant, rosy, frog-inhabited pool of their own selfishness—right-handed men, worse than useless—while many a man with large heart and little purse has out of his limited means made poverty leap for joy and started an influence that overspreads the grave and will swing round and round the throne of God world without end. Amen.

Ah, me! It is high time that you left-handed men, who have been longing for this gift and that eloquence and the other man's wealth, should take your left hand out of your pockets. Who made all these railroads? Who set up all these cities? Who started all these churches and schools and asylums? Who has done the tugging and running and pulling? Men of no wonderful endowments, thousands of them acknowledging themselves to be left-handed, and yet they were earnest, and yet they were determined, and yet they were triumphant.

But I do not suppose that Ehud, the first time he took a sling in his left hand, could throw a stone at a hairbreadth and not miss. I suppose it was practice that gave him the wonderful dexterity. Go forth to your spheres of duty and be not discouraged if, in your first attempts, you miss the mark. Ehud missed it. Take another stone, put it carefully into the sling, swing it around your head, take better aim, and the next time you will strike the center. The first time a mason rings his trowel upon the brick he does not expect to put up a perfect wall. The first time a carpenter sends the plane over a board or drives a bit through a beam he does not expect to make perfect execution. The first time a boy attempts a rhyme he does not expect to rhyme. "Lalla Rookh" or a "Lady of the Lake." Do not be surprised if in your first efforts at doing good you are not very largely successful. Understand that usefulness is an art, a science, a trade. There was an oculist performing a very difficult operation on the human eye. A young doctor stood by and said: "How easily you do that; it don't seem to cause you any trouble at all." "Ah," said the old oculist, "it is very easy now, but I spoiled a batch of eyes to learn that." Be not surprised if it takes some practice before we can help men to moral eyesight and bring them to vision of the cross.

When Garibaldi was going out to battle he told his troops what he wanted them to do, and after he had described what he wanted them to do they said:

"Well, general, what are you going to give us for all this?" "Well," he replied, "I don't know what else you will get, but you will get hunger, and cold, and wounds, and death. How do you like it?" His men stood before him for a little while in silence and then they threw up their hands and cried: "We are the men! We are the men!" The Lord Jesus Christ calls you to His service. I do not promise you an easy time in this world. You may have persecutions, and trials, and misrepresentations, but afterward there comes an eternal weight of glory, and you can bear the wounds, and the bruises, and the misrepresentations, if you have the reward afterward. Have you not enough enthusiasm to cry out: "We are the men! We are the men!"

I learn also from this subject the danger of worldly elevation. This Eglon was what the world called a great man. There were hundreds of people who would have considered it the greatest honor of their life just to have him speak to them, yet, although he is so high up in worldly position, he is not beyond the reach of Ehud's dagger. I see a great many people trying to climb up in social position, having an idea that there is a safe place somewhere far above, not knowing that the mountain of fame has a top like Mont Blanc, covered with perpetual snow.

We laugh at the children of Shinar for trying to build a tower that could reach to the heavens, but I think if our eyesight were only good enough we could see a Babel in many a dooryard. Oh, the struggle is fierce! It is store against store, house against house, street against street, nation against nation. The goal for which men are running is chairs and chandeliers and mirrors and houses and lands and presidential equipments. If they get what they anticipate, what have they? Men are not safe from calamity while they live, and worse than that, they are not safe after they are dead, for I have seen swine root up graveyards. One day a man goes up into publicity, and the world does him honor, and people climb up into sycamore trees to watch him as he passes, and as he goes along on the shoulders of the people there is a waving of hats and a wild huzza. Tomorrow the same man is caught between the jaws of the printing press and mangled and bruised, and the very same persons who applauded him before cry: "Down with the traitor! Down with him!"

Belshazzar sits at the feast, the mighty men of Babylon sitting all around him. Witeparkles like the wine and the wide like the wit. Music rolls up among the chandeliers; the chandeliers flash down on the decanters. The breath of hanging gardens floats in on the night air. The voice of revelry floats out. Amid wreaths and tapestry and folded banners a finger writes. The march of a host is heard on the stairs. Laughter catches in the throat. A thousand hearts stop beating. The blow is struck. The blood on the floor is richer hued than the wine on the table. The kingdom has departed. Belshazzar was no worse perhaps than hundreds of people in Babylon, but his position slew him. Oh, be content with just such a position as God has placed you in! It may not be said of us: "He was a great general," or "He was an honored chieftain," or "He was mighty in worldly attainments," but this thing may be said of you and of me: "He was a good citizen, a faithful Christian, a friend of Jesus." And that in the last day will be the highest of all eulogiums.

I learn further from this subject that death comes to the summer house. Eglon did not expect to die in that fine place. Amid all the flower leaves that drifted like summer snow into the window, in the tinkle and dash of the fountains, in the sound of a thousand leaves fluting on one tree branch, in the cool breeze that came up to shake feverish trouble out of the king's locks—there was nothing that spoke of death, but there he died! In the winter, when the snow is a shroud, and when the wind is a dirge, it is easy to think of our mortality, but when the weather is pleasant and all our surroundings are agreeable, how difficult it is for us to appreciate the truth that we are mortal! And yet my text teaches that death does sometimes come to the summer house. He is blind and cannot see the leaves. He is deaf and cannot hear the fountains. Oh, if death would ask us for victims we could point him to hundreds of people who would rejoice to have him come. Push back the door of that hovel. Look at that little child—cold, and sick, and hungry. It has never heard the name of God but in blasphemy. Parents intoxicated, staggering around its straw bed. Oh, death, there is a mark for thee! Up with it into the light! Before those little feet stumble on life's pathway give them rest.

Here is an aged man. He has done his work. He has done it gloriously. The companions of his youth all gone, his children dead, he longs to be at rest, and wearily the days and the nights pass. He says: "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly." Oh, death, there is a mark for thee! Take from him the staff and give him the scepter! Up with him into the light, where eyes never grow dim, and the hair whiteneth not through the long years of eternity. Ah! death will not do that. Death turns back from the straw bed and from the aged man ready for the skies and comes to the summer house. What does thou here, thou bony, ghastly monster, amid this waving grass and under this sunlight sifting through the tree branches? Children are at play. How quickly their feet go and their locks toss in the wind. Father and mother stand at the side of the room looking on, enjoying their glee. It does not seem possible that the wolf should ever break into that fold and carry off a lamb. Meanwhile an old archer stands looking through the thicket. He points his arrow at the brightest of the group—he is a sure marksman—the bow bends, the arrow speeds! Rush now!

The quick feet have stopped and the locks toss no more in the wind. Laughter has gone out of the hall. Death in the summer house!

Here is a father in midlife. His coming home at night is the signal for mirth. The children rush to the door, and there are books on the evening stand, and the hours pass away on glad feet. There is nothing wanting in that home. Religion is there and sacrifices on the altar morning and night. You look in that household and say: "I cannot think of anything happier. I do not really believe the world is so sad a place as some people describe it to be." The scene changes. Father is sick. The doors must be kept shut. The deathwatch chirps dolefully on the hearth. The children whisper and walk softly where once they romped. Passing the house late at night, you see the quick glancing of lights from room to room. It is all over! Death in the summer house!

Here is an aged mother—aged, but not infirm. You think you will have the joy of caring for her wants a good while yet. As she goes from house to house, to children and grandchildren, her coming is a dropping of sunlight in the dwelling. Your children see her coming through the lane, and they cry: "Grandmother's come!" Care for you has marked up her face with many a deep wrinkle, and her back stoops with carrying your burdens. Some day she is very quiet. She says she is not sick, but something tells you you will not much longer have a mother. She will sit with you no more at the table nor at the hearth. Her soul goes out so gently you do not exactly know the moment of its going. Fold the hands that have done so many kindnesses for you right toward you since before you were born. Let the pilgrim rest. She is weary. Death in the summer house!

Gather about us what we will of comfort and luxury. When the pale messenger comes he does not stop to look at the architecture of the house before he comes in, nor, entering, does he wait to examine the pictures we have gathered on the wall, or bending over your pillow, he does not stop to see whether there is color in the cheek or gentleness in the eye or intelligence in the brow. But what of that? Must we stand forever mourning among the graves of our dead? No! No! The people in Bengal bring cages of birds to the graves of their dead, and then they open the cages, and the birds go singing heavenward. So I would bring to the graves of your dead all bright thoughts and congratulations and bid them sing of victory and redemption. I stamp on the bottom of the grave, and it breaks through into the light and the glory of Heaven. The ancients used to think that the straits entering the Red sea were very dangerous places, and they supposed that every ship that went through those straits would be destroyed, and they were in the habit of putting on weeds of mourning for those who had gone on that voyage, as though they were actually dead. Do you know what they called those straits? They called them the "Gate of Tears." I stand at the gate of tears through which many of you loved ones have gone, and I want to tell you that all are not shipwrecked that have gone through those straits into the great ocean stretching out beyond. The sound that comes from that other shore on still nights when we are wrapped in prayer makes me think that the departed are not dead. We are the dead—we who toil, we who weep, we who sin—we are the dead. How my heart aches for human sorrow—this sound of breaking hearts that I hear all about me, this last look of faces that never will brighten again, this last kiss of lips that never will speak again, this widowhood and orphanage! Oh, when will the day of sorrow be gone!

After the sharpest winter the spring discounts from the shoulder of a southern gale and puts its warm hand upon the earth, and in its palm there comes the grass, and there come the flowers, and God reads over the poetry of bird and brook and bloom and pronounces it very good. What, my friends, if every winter had not its spring, and every night its day, and every gloom its glow, and every bitter now its sweet hereafter! If you have been on the sea, you know, as the ship passes in the night, there is a phosphorescent track left behind it, and as the waters roll up they toss with unimaginable splendor. Well, across this great ocean of human trouble Jesus walks. Oh, that in the phosphorescent track of His feet we might all follow and be illumined!

There was a gentleman in a rail car who saw in that same car three passengers of very different circumstances. The first was a maniac. He was carefully guarded by his attendants. His mind, like a ship dismasted, was beating against a dark, desolate coast, from which no help could come. The train stopped and the man was taken out into the asylum, to waste away perhaps through years of gloom. The second passenger was a culprit. The outraged law had seized on him. As the cars jolted the chains rattled. On his face were crime, depravity and despair. The train halted and he was taken out to the penitentiary, to which he had been condemned. There was the third passenger, under far different circumstances. She was a bride. Every body was gay as a marriage bell. Life glittered and beckoned. Her companion was taking her to his father's house. The train halted. The old man was there to welcome her to her new home and his white locks snowed down upon her as he sealed his word with a father's kiss. Quickly we fly toward eternity. We will soon be there. Some leave this life condemned culprits, and they receive a pardon. Oh, may it be with us that, leaving this fleeting life for the next, we may find our Father ready to greet us to our new home with Him for ever! That will be a marriage banquet! Father's welcome! Father's bosom! Father's kiss! Heaven! Heaven!

Post Office Robbed.

Napoleon, Jan. 21.—Burglars looted the post office here early Friday morning. Entrance was gained by cutting out a panel of the door leading into an alley. Tools were stolen from a blacksmith shop, but the entire job was done with a small sledgehammer and some powder. The handles of the vault were pried in until an opening was made in the casing, into which powder was poured. Inside the vault was a small safe, both doors of which were forced. The combination was broken off the vault door, and the outer door of the safe was blown off and twisted beyond repair. The amount of cash and stamps stolen is understood to be in the neighborhood of $1,100.

A Toledo Woman's Crime.

Toledo, Jan. 23.—Mrs. S. J. McCollough, wife of a well-known man of this city, committed suicide Saturday night and attempted to kill her three children. The woman was undoubtedly insane. Four of the children were taken violently ill, having eaten diseased meat. One child died and the mother attempted to give the living children, all of whom were in a critical condition, a dose of carbolic acid. She was prevented by people in the house, but she slipped away and was found later in a dying condition, having taken the poison herself. She survived but a few minutes.

Raised the Price of Lime.

Toledo, Jan. 24.—The western lime manufacturers met in this city Monday and agreed on a scale of prices. They claim no trust was formed, but prices were fixed which they claim will be maintained throughout the west at least. Peter Martin, of Huntington, Ind., is the president of the organization and George B. Christian, of Marion, O., secretary. The manufacturers present represented an annual output of 2,500,000 barrels. The companies represent a capital of $3,000,000. The advance made is understood to be from 25 to 35 cents a barrel.

Arraignment Postponed.

Canton, Jan. 24.—Mrs. Anna E. George was taken into court yesterday for arraignment on the indictment for the murder of George D. Saxton. Attorneys John C. Welty and James S. Sterling, who have represented her without direct authority of court up to this time, were assigned to defend her. They objected to arraignment at this time, claiming there were features of the indictment they wanted to investigate before allowing their client to recognize it by pleading to it. A continuance was granted, no date being set.

New Enterprises in Ashtabula County.

Ashtabula, Jan. 20.—Ashtabula and Conneaut are beginning to feel the wave of prosperity. Crickshank Bros., canners and picklers of Allegheny, are to locate a plant at Ashtabula, promising an expenditure of $150,000 to $200,000 yearly and employing several hundred hands. The Rover Tanning Co. will increase its plant 50 per cent. and the Ashtabula Telephone Co. will increase its capital stock from $15,000 to $25,000 to meet its business. Conneaut expects to start a bicycle factory and a $30,000 paving brick concern.

Almost Asphyxiated.

Bucyrus, Jan. 21.—Six persons were almost fatally asphyxiated at an early hour Friday morning at the residence of Conductor Adam Conkle, by gas escaping from a hard coal base burner. The most seriously affected are Mrs. Conkle and two children and Mrs. Carroll, of Charleston, W. Va., and two children who are visiting at the Conkle home, who were all in a state of partial collapse when discovered.

Soldiers Arrested.

Columbus, Jan. 21.—Five privates of the Fourth Ohio volunteer infantry were arrested Thursday at the instance of Quartermaster Donovan and slated "suspicious" at the city prison. All were released as soon as Chief of Police Kelly discovered that they had been incarcerated because they had not repaid loans and credits to officers of the regiment.

Dellenbaugh Must Stand Trial.

Cleveland, Jan. 24.—The circuit court yesterday overruled the demurrer to the charges against Judge Dellenbaugh. In answer to the points raised by the defense the court held that it had jurisdiction in the case and that the charges were sufficient, if proved, to justify Judge Dellenbaugh's disbarment. The opinion on the demurrer was given by Judge Caldwell.

A Hunter Fatally Injured.

Portsmouth, Jan. 24.—Harry McGraw, of Glenn, while hunting on Monday, slipped on the frozen ground. In trying to save himself he dropped his gun. The gun struck the ground with such force as to explode both barrels. His right arm was shattered, necessitating amputation, and a great hole torn in his side. His injuries are fatal.

Slot Machines Must Go.

Cleveland, Jan. 24.—Gambling machines of all descriptions that are run in the city must go. Police Judge Fiedler rendered a decision to that effect Monday.

Clevelanders Buy Oatmeal Stock.

Akron, Jan. 30.—Details of a deal that involves an entire change in the management of the American Cereal Co., or oatmeal trust, leaked out Thursday. Within the past week 12,000 shares of the stock of the American Cereal Co., representing $1,200,000, have been transferred to new owners. The new owners are Myron T. Herrick and James Parmelee and a few of their friends of Cleveland, and J. R. Nutt and Will Christy, of this city. This purchase does not represent a controlling interest, but it represents a balance of power.
