

SESSION TO HOLD ALL SUMMER LONG, LEADERS THINK

Clark and Underwood Have Little Hope That Congress Will Get Through Its Labors Before September.

Washington, June 9.—Both Speaker Clark and Majority Leader Underwood of the house are bearish on the early adjournment of congress. Neither believes that the house will be allowed to take three-day adjournments when the anti-trust measures are taken up in the senate.

On this point Speaker Clark said: "I told these fellows last year that in my judgment we would merge the extra session into the regular session. I was right then. I don't predict that we will do that again, but I have been here too long to take much stock in pay stories of early adjournment. The earliest date that I can see is September, and I haven't much confidence in that."

Several Matters Pending.

The speaker pointed to the fact the house has several contested elections to attend to. The Mutual matter has never been settled. There may be some discussion of the sugar case, although it is fairly certain now that there will be no impeachment.

Leader Underwood said as soon as he came back from his recent short vacation that the house would have a lot of business to do before the bills were all through the hands of those members who believed they could best arrange pairs and be absent in their districts from time to time during July and August.

The trust program, which up to the time the president met the manufacturers' convention looked unreal, begins to assume the position of a serious problem. The president said that there was no occasion to postpone these measures. That it was better to pass them for two reasons, that it would remove uncertainty, which was the worst thing for business, and the other that moderate and sane bills now were preferable to more radical measures later.

He is in earnest about the trust program. Congress has now discovered this, and whether the senate likes it or not, he will use his influence to keep it here and get these bills through. The opinion of the senators is that he will be as successful as he was with currency legislation. The president will stay here himself as long as congress stays.

The senate, therefore, will buckle down to business. It has received the Clayton omnibus trust measure, known as the complementary Sherman bill. This has gone to the judicial committee, and will be reported out for action. Senator Newlands has introduced his federal trades commission bill, which differs somewhat from the Covington bill passed by the house, and will try to have it made a special order following the Panama canal bill.

Vote on Tolls Bill Delayed.

The latter the senate voted to vote on Tuesday, but this hope was dashed by the persistent occupancy of the floor by Senator Read of Missouri with speech on the effects of the tariff and a fiery attack on the head of an automobile company who recently advised the senate to adjourn for the rest of the country. This took the day that was expected to make room for the canal speeches of Cummings, La Follette and one or two other senators, and put over the canal vote until early next week. But with the canal bill out of the way the senate will be expected to give some attention to appropriation bills if they are to be passed before the end of the present fiscal year, June 25.

There will be determined opposition to Senator Newlands proposition to give his federal trades commission bill a preference in the hands of several senators who have no grievances on the calendar and by others who are opposed to trust legislation entirely. The chance for getting this bill into active discussion are not good at this month.

The most conservative opinion sets out trust discussion back into July and does not hope for a vote until two months have elapsed from then. The program so far as tentatively agreed upon points to an effort to pass the trade commission bill and the omnibus bill but to leave the stock and bond bill for future consideration.

May Drop Bond Bill.

The latter, as it passed the house, is considered to be so drastic that it would discourage investments indefinitely. The senate will examine closely and probably drop it. The incoming directorate feature of the house trade commission bill has been left out of the Newlands bill, but may reappear either as an amendment or as a separate measure or it may be dropped altogether.

The Mexican situation is now considered to be entirely in the hands of the executive, but yet many members say that it is full of dynamite and may again upset all present programs.

FRIENDLY SUIT IS FILED AGAINST CITY; JUDGMENT RENDERED

The first legal step toward deciding whether the city has the right to sell the city hall to the American Trust & Savings bank company was recorded yesterday when Judge Palmer, of the district court, pro tem, rendered judgment in the case of J. W. Palmer vs. the City of Albuquerque, the bank, Mayor Postright and the council.

The case came before Judge Palmer on a demurrer to an answer to the complaint, which George S. Koch filed as attorney for Mr. Palmer, a taxpayer. Palmer is the complainant seeking a perpetual injunction restraining the council from entering into the contract with the American Trust & Savings company. The demurrer was overruled.

Mr. Koch said he would take an appeal at once and that the state supreme court would be urged to act expeditiously, as is not to delay the completion of the city hall in the event that its decision is favorable.
