Fort Dodge, Iowa, Feb. 21, 1912.

THE LOGICAL CANDIDATE.

There are three items in the record of the Taft administration any one of which should assure the president's renomination, while in combination they offer an unanswerable argument in favor of his reelection.

President Taft has given us the tariff commission, and formulated the policy of scientific, protective tariff revision on the schedule by schedule plan. In doing this President Taft has offered the only rational ground upon which the republican party can stand in view of the well nigh unanimous demand for tariff reductions—a demand which was not satisfied by the tariff law of 1909. Under the Taft tariff program the republican party can make further reductions in the tariff schedules. It can do this without departing from the time honored protective principle—a principle to which no republican admits opposition and to which many democrats, while professing opposition, really owe allegiance. Such tariff revision can be undertaken with a guaranty that no industry shall be ruined by the withdrawal of protection that can be justified under the republican definition of the measure of protection. It can be carried to completion, one schedule at a time, with the least possible disturbance to business while the process is going on. President Taft has formulated this tariff program without much help from congress. If the tariff is to be the paramount issue, and the democrats are fixing things so it must be, who can compare with Taft as the logical republican nominee, and probable winner in the election?

If the tariff were not to figure at all, President Taft ought to be given unanimous renomination and easy reelection on the strength of his administration's record in enforcing the antitrust law. Ever since Roosevelt started the ball rolling there has been general public demand for strict enforcement of the law against all offending corporations. President Taft has done what Roosevelt did not do. President Taft has enforced the law against offenders without discrimination or favoritism. That was what the public wanted, wasn't it? The only complaint has come from Wall street. Are the plain people going back on Taft for his drastic enforcement of a law that they insisted should be enforced? If they are not, what chance would there be of electing any other candidate—republican or democrat?

President Taft has done what every political economist has been advocating, without practical result, since the early days of our government. He has actually made a start toward applying business principles of economy and efficiency in administering the business affairs of the federal government. Bear in mind President Taft

THE MAGNET.

The Only Walk.

I slide in the icy gutter and fracture a neck or knee; and I would that my tongue could utter the thoughts that arise in me. So many of lofty scheming stand 'round in the mart and talk; what profits their rosy dreamings if perilous is the walk? Come forth from your hall or hovel when slick is the earth with sleet, and do with a wooden shovel your stunt on the public street, cease pushing through your mustaches your views on the course of Taft, and sprinkle the walk with ashes, for that is the wiser graft. My neighbors will stand debating the worth of the income tax, while out on the walks are skating poor souls on their heads or backs. I don't care a whoop if Teddy or Woodrow or Bob should run; it's snowing again already and I shall remove a ton of snow with my good old shovel, and sprinkle the ice with salt, that no one may fall and grovel and swear at the name of Walt.—Walt Mason.

An Indian's Attitude Toward Death.

"It is natural for one to die, and hence there is nothing unusual about it. It is the same thing as going on a far journey, and I like the thought of making it as a journey here in life. I know that yonder behind the west, somewhere in the great distance, there flows a river, that over the river is a bridge for me to cross, and that there on the farther shore awaits one who will give me welcome. I do not know what my life in the spirit world will be like. I concern myself little about the thought of it. I simply rest confident that I shall find it natural and simple, the same as here.

"Such are my notions about death, and I have yet no good reason to change them."—From "Notes on the Fox Indians," by William Jones in Journal of History and Politics," published in the State Historical Society of Iowa.
