The young man was do by her friends on account of his sof lunching just before going to One evening he found a large rang of crackers on his table, aly jumping to the conclusion that his chievous young lady had made the gift, he went on tiptoe to the room, and tossed a cracker ugh the open transom. Each time a rustling was heard, but no one spoke. Having tossed the entire contents of the bag into the room, the young man stole away, and, as he left the corrider, met the young lady coming to her room. Troubled in hismind, he made in quiries the next morning as to the effect of his bombardment, and learned to his horror that the first cracker thrown had landed on the head of the young lady's grandmotter, an infirm old lady of nearly eighty, who was at the moment kneeling by her bestside eugaged in her devotions. Much alarmed, she had risen to her fee, only to receive a second shot. She had then retreated to a corner, but being furtler assailed, and not being able to form any idea of the nature and origin of the mayter and origin of the mysterious missiles, she had finally crept under the bed, where sh was iscovered in a forlorn condition by her astonished grand-child.

Deliberation.

nuch to be said in favor of iberating before acting, many rush deeds are perigling all sorts of unfortunences in these securities. upon future action. It is that which prote aside the first instinctive perceptions of right and wrong, speculates upon them, doubts them, subjects them to processes of casuistical reasoning, and generally ends either by so cloudeding the mental vision that no distinct comes is visible or by actually making the worse appear the better cause. Much of the wrong doing of the wrill is the fruit of this kind of deliberation.

Play implies the notion of plentifulness. The gambols of the child betray an overplus of strength and spirits; the billy of the waters give the idea of nuss inted room; the blossoms of spr ng, the farrance of the woods, the grandeur of the mountains, the smiles of the harvest—all impress us with the feeling of abundance So, wherever there is plenty of power and to spare, plenty of resources of all kinnis and to spare, we lose the sense of hard toil, of cold duty, of narrow rules, and expand intothat play which is the height of power, the depth of feeling, the beauty—because the truest excellence—of life. If this be so, let it forever rescue play from the stigma of candidishness. Let it rather be an ideal which we may strive to reach that a frivolity from which we strive to fly. Work is honorable and duty is holy; but, when the whole hear is in the love, they rise even to a higher plane, that of free, joyfal, and unbounded activity. FOURTH Improvement.

All improvement must be made on the basis of actual present condition; it must begin with whatever is worthy, however feeble it may be, and proceed by gradually but faithfully developing it to a larger and fuller action. So, when we would bely to lift some one to a higher life, we must not begin by striving to obliterate their past or quench their natures, but by searching for their productions to build upon—some tening of qualities to build upon—some tening or right or duty to revive. In developing these there is a far more reasonable hope of induencing a character for good than in any effort to tear away what is

It is stated that the difficulty originated over the new teacher recently procured, whom it is said is incompetent to fill the position to which she was appointed. Others say that she is well qualified, and that the objections raised are through spite or personal feelings against the instructress.

In view of these differences it is stated; upon good authority, that the committee having in charge the recent Volks-fest, for the benefit of the school, which netted them about $1,200, refuse to turn over any of the proceeds, until the present teacher is removed, which recent where yould he havened is read the.
