EXILE IN WASHINGTON

Story of an Oriental Who Fled from His Native Land to Escape Assassination.

HIDING IN A FRIEND'S HOUSE

His Name Is Ye Wha and Is the Oldest Son of Li Hsi, the King and Newly Created Emperor of Korea—The Conspiracies Against the Life of the Prince Frequent and Bold.

William E. Curtis in a special to his paper, the Chicago Record, from Washington, D. C., thus describes Ye Wha's flight from his native land to escape death and now living in exile at the National Capital:

In a humble boarding house in 12th street, just north of N. in this city, resides the heir to a throne, who, like the princes in the fairy tales, has been compelled to leave his country to escape death and now living in exile at the National Capital.

His name is Ye Wha, and he is the oldest son of Li Hsi, the king and newly created emperor of Korea. His official name is Ye Kang, but his name is the son of the king, while his rival is the son of the late Queen Min Yi, of Myung Sung Whang Hu (the bright empress), as she is now called, who was brutally assassinated by Japanese conspirators in Seoul two years ago.

For many years there has been a bitter rivalry in Korea between Tai Won Kun, the father of the king who is called the prince parent, and the national grand duke, and was regent of the kingdom for many years during the minority of his son, and the late Queen Min Yi, who had been termed the ablest woman in Asia—the Cleopatra of the East. She was a fit thing as far as her stature counted, but she had an exceedingly bright intellect and a love of power and intrigue which was extraordinary in a woman of her education and environment. Her husband, the king, Li Hsi, was a puppet in her hands, and whenever he received a foreign diplomatist or had a meeting with his ministers she always stood behind a curtain that fell back of the throne and prompted his answers and instructions.

From our standpoint she was wicked, corrupt and cruel, but from her standpoint, measured by the morals of her own people, she was a most estimable woman, wise, patriotic and worthy of admiration. Her chief ambition was the selection of her own son, a weakling in body and mind, as the successor of her husband on the throne. The king of Korea may choose the heir to the crown from among the male members of the royal family, but the choice must be ratified by the ministry and through her influence her boy has been made the crown prince.

Her enemies, led by Tai Won Kun and encouraged by the Viscount Alahan, the Japanese minister, assaulted the palace in October, 1895, and murdered her in a most atrocious manner and burned her body in a stove near the king's residence. The old prince parent, who is perhaps the wickedest man alive, was overthrown again and the friends of the queen were restored to the throne. Shortly after the old prince parent, who is perhaps the wickedest man alive, was overthrown again and the friends of the queen were restored to the throne. Shortly after the old prince parent, who is perhaps the wickedest man alive, was overthrown again and the friends of the queen were restored to the throne. Shortly after the old prince parent, who is perhaps the wickedest man alive, was overthrown again and the friends of the queen were restored to the throne.

There are several other princes competing for the throne, but the other whose partisanship are considered dangerous is Ye Chung, a nephew of the king and son of his eldest brother. Like Ye Wha, he is an exile and is living in London. He is the candidate of the prince parent, Tai Won Kun, and has been involved in several conspiracies for the overthrow of the government. For a time they had him in prison at Seoul, but afterwards sent him out of the country.

To escape the vengeance of the partisanship of the queen and her half-witted child Ye Wha was sent to Japan, where he remained for a year or more, closely watched by the Koreans residing in that country. He attended the famous school in modern languages when he was admitted that his life was not safe and that he had better go to America. The Koreans saw a safe way of getting rid of unpopular politicians. Only two or three years ago a prime minister, who had fled to China, was invited down to Shanghai for a conference by some agents of the government, and when he entered their apartments they calmly cut his throat. Another gentleman of distinction who took refuge in Japan was visited by a Korean who had been prominent in the government and would have suffered the same fate but for his suspicions and a convenient open window.

Mindful of these incidents, Ye Wha determined to get out of the dangerous neighborhood and made arrangements to come to the United States with the Rev. Dr. Gale, a Presbyterian missionary who was on his way home for several years and had been in the government at Tokyo. He was detained by the government at Tokyo and Mr. Gale sailed for Yokohama. He was detained by the government at Tokyo and Mr. Gale sailed for Yokohama. He was detained by the government at Tokyo and Mr. Gale sailed for Yokohama. He was detained by the government at Tokyo and Mr. Gale sailed for Yokohama.

of several Korean exiles. There Ye Wha found a refuge and several congenial companions. But Soh Kwang Pom died in December last and the colony was broken up.

Only a day or two ago Chin Pom Ye, the Korean minister, appealed to the Secretary of State for assistance in securing the property left by Prince Soh, claiming that it was purchased with money belonging to the government, but the latter left a will in which it was bequeathed to the Korean consul-general in New York. Soh was a very able man and when he died the government lost one of its most dangerous enemies and Tai Won Kun one of his strongest supporters.

Prince Ye Wha is now under the protection of Gen. Min Yung Whan, another Korean exile, formerly Commander-in-Chief of the army, who was sent by the king as an ambassador to the coronation of the Czar of Russia and the Jubilee of Queen Victoria. He has always been loyal to the crown, but met Soh Kwang Pom in Washington who persuaded him that his life would be in danger in he returned to Seoul. So he has remained here ever since first as the guest and companion of the late Mr. St. John and now self the head of the little colony of exiles.

The prince is studying English and the modern sciences with J. S. Gale, a Presbyterian missionary, who lived many years in Korea and is famous for having compiled a dictionary of that language. Dr. Gale does a high class of English and teaches him and his fellow-countrymen as an act of courtesy, just as he does Mr. Ye, the present minister of Korea.

Mr. Ye is devoted to the king and has been of very great service to him. It was through his ingenuity and cleverness that the king was enabled to escape from the clutches of a year or more ago and find refuge in the Russian legation at Seoul, where for the first time since the assassination of the queen, he was allowed to carry out his own will. While he was in the palace he was a prisoner of his own people, Tai Won Kun, and was compelled for fear of his life to do exactly as Soh Kwang Pom and other conspirators directed. But Mr. Chin Pom Ye, who was a high class of English and teaches him and his fellow-countrymen as an act of courtesy, just as he does Mr. Ye, the present minister of Korea.

A thrill of terror is experienced when a brassy cough of croup sounds through the house at night. But the terror soon changes to relief after One Minute Cough Cure has been administered. Safe and harmless for children, J. M. F. Trotter, Norfolk; R. L. Walker, Brambleton, and Truitt & Smith, Berkeley.
