

The Dayton Journal pretends to think that we are in an "awkward fix" for saying that Mr. Vallandigham in his speech "took administration ground in reference to slavery in the territories, in accordance with opinions he has always expressed."

It seems that, yesterday, in the House, Mr. Vallandigham corrected the reporter, stating that in his speech, he had said nothing about slavery in the territories. Well, what of that? Where is the awkward fix?

A Correction Expected. The Dayton Gazette seems to understand that Mr. Vallandigham, in speaking of the "north," had reference to Ohio and the West. Pray, Mr. Gazette, did you read the telegraphic report of the Dayton Journal, or of the Cincinnati paper? If you read only the garbled report of the first, you are somewhat excusable, and will, without doubt, correct your statement that Mr. Vallandigham had insulted his constituents.

Get Things Mixed. The Dayton Journal says that the South "may get a type of Ohio Republicanism from Corwin's speech"—that "Corwin truly represents not only the common sense of the Republican party in Ohio, but that of a large portion of the Democracy."

We would like to know where! Does he "represent Ohio Republicanism" in denouncing Brown, and in favoring a fugitive slave law? And does he speak Democratic views when he denounces popular sovereignty?

Come, now, neighbor, that is laying it on too thick in a town that supports daily prayer meetings.

English Military Preparations. Steps have been taken recently in London for the formation of a Rifle Brigade to consist of Irishmen resident in that city, under the title of the Irish Volunteer Rifle Corps. It is stated that an exceedingly efficient body is likely to be formed in a very short time. The applications for enrollment in the Irish Rifle Corps had amounted to 700.

The enrolled members of the Inns of Court Volunteers had met 200 strong, to elect a Managing Committee. A meeting in the city of Westminster had been held for the purpose of Riflemen. The Times contains a long letter, urging the efficiency of a corps, a volunteer cavalry.

The Registrar General, in his late report, says that the youth of a country are growing at such a rate as to add a battalion to strength every few days.

"What Are You Doing." This important enquiry was addressed to us a few weeks ago by one who was universally known and respected by the oldest as well as nearly all the younger citizens of the Miami Valley. He was a man of great energy, industry, and enterprise, and had a vast amount of intelligence and practical, good common sense. In 1865, when only about 21 years of age, he is in company with a comparison from his neighborhood in Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Abijah Hunt, set out on horseback to explore this western country.

After crossing the rugged Alleghenies, and exploring the Miami Valley, they passed down South to New Orleans, but no part of the South or West seemed so inviting as the spot where Dayton now stands, and to this place our traveler returned and took up his permanent abode. His first night was passed at a log tavern where all the beds were engaged, and he was necessarily compelled to take his saddle for a pillow and sleep on the floor. In this way the first night was passed in Dayton by the late Horatio G. Phillips—of him the reader will perceive we are writing; a gentleman who has for more than half a century taken a leading part in laying broad and deep the foundation of our mighty western empire. His last words addressed to us, "What are you doing?" we have replied to, and passed on, little thinking at the time that he should never behold him again; but how solemn and important those words now appear to us, not because they were uttered by a gentleman of great enterprise and wealth, but because we had known him as a friend, from our earliest recollection, to all who were engaged in developing the resources of the Miami Valley.

Mr. Phillips had taken an active part from the time he located in this beautiful valley until his death, in improving its towns and country, and no man was more successful in all his undertakings. He always knew what he was doing and the results of his labors are to be seen in every direction.

Reader, "what are you doing?" Are you engaged at some useful employment, calculated to promote the welfare of society, or are you idling away your time at places of amusement? Do you spend your evenings at home with your family, striving to teach them lessons of morality and virtue? Are you engaged at this time in such pursuits as are best adapted to improve your temporal and spiritual welfare? Have you a just conception of the moral obligations that you are under to your forefathers, to your country and to God, for the inheritance of this fruitful, beautiful valley, and the freedom you enjoy? Or are you plotting mischief, and willing to sacrifice every principle for the sake of office? Do you fully understand the price that was paid for your liberties, and the improvement of the country in which you live? Is your time employed in rounds of pleasure, or at the gaming table, striving to kill time, soul and body, or are you seeking out the poor and trying to relieve their wants? Have you any idea of how much good you may be able to do for your fellow man? Do you visit the widows and the fatherless in their afflictions, and relieve their wants this cold winter? Are you a man blessed with the world's goods, and do you take pleasure in giving employment to those who need it? Or do you take advantage of the necessities of your neighbor, and grind the faces of the poor?

What are you doing? The world pioneers were great workers. Nicholas Longworth, Jas. N. G. Schenck and Horatio G. Phillips, who came to this valley from New Jersey, poor young men, but they were early taking habits of industry and economy. Here they brought with them and never lost sight of them. Few men in any country have gained greater wealth. Longworth and Schenck still survive. Who are to take the places of those old pioneers, and what are they doing?

Why Not?—By the way, since so much is being done for this Brown family, say the Journal of Commerce, why is no effort made for the widow Doyle, whose husband and two children were murdered cold blooded by Brown while in Kansas, as charged in her recent letter to him?

The New Congress.

We present herewith a perfect—we believe the first perfect—list of Members of the present Congress. The House is entirely full, two vacancies which were created by the death of the Members first chosen, having been filled by special elections. There are several vacancies in the Senate, caused by death and failure to elect, all of which will doubtless be filled at an early day.

The doubts which still hang over the organization of the House will cause list of its members to be widely scrutinized with interest.
