Shoddy at Long Branch.

rriting from Long Branch relates the follow-GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY, family. That the hotel register showed the name of Shoddy in connection with this group, I do not assert. I scorn registers. That the head of that family was entitled, by divine right, to the name of Cecias T. Shoddy, I do assert. He was well enough; shoveled his food into his mouth with his knife, it is true, but so does many an honest man. Mrs. Shoddy was resplendent with diamonds, and her stubby red fingers glittered with many colored jawels; and she fat and not fair, and past forty. But with neither of these was I "wrapt up." It was with "that boy." Between the parents he sat, directly opposite me at the table, and if I concealed with my napkin the visible struggle that went on with in me, I trust no one observed it. He was a feeble urehin with watery white eyes and a freekeled face, who ate his food with the voracity of a starved spaniel, and blinked continually like a toad in the rainy storm. He gobbled; he gnawed and he was clawed. His fingers were alternately in everything within bis reach, including his bair, his coffee and He scorned knives and forks; when he did use them it was with energy of despair. He would saize a bit of friensed chicken in both hands, and as he removed the edible portion with his teath, he tossed the reected parts over his shoulder upon the floor. He got butter on his cost sleeve and he wiped it off on his pantaloons; he spilled everything within his reach, be thrust his hand behind him to grab the waiters by the was brought him, he would scratch his head thoughtfully and stare at it while collecting his energies for the attack. He had an eye for everything on the table; and the dessert completely nonplussed him. "Mar, what's that "he eried, as a grily colored blanc mange greeted his astonished vision. "That's puddin," Mar made answer, and "gime a lot," the young hopeful responded. Only when appealed to, however, did Mrs. Shoddy ob serve her child; so also, Mr. Shoody. The parental unconecioneness of that child was some almost sublime. He might have stood on his head, I think, and they would not have wavered.

A Slight Mistake.

Some men make fortunes by dint of energetic perseverance and economy, some become wealthy by inheritance, while others marry rich. The latter is decidedly preferable to some, when the lady is amiable, pretty and intellectual. So thought the young man whose success, or want of success, in this line chroniele

During the course of the war, a citizen of Delaware, saw and admired a damsel, who had left the South, alienated from her father's roof on account of her "Union senti-ments." as she stated, said father being a wealthy resident of Staunton. He sympa thized with her in her exile for opinion's sake, and, with the attraction of money ahead, Courted and married her.

The war having ceased, a few days since he arrived in Staunton and repaired to the parental domicil, to make himself known as the son-in-law, and to get a share of his father's wealth (his right) in hand.

Reader, we leave you to imagine his cha-grin, when he was informed that instead of being the son-in-law, his wife was of negro extraction, and had only been the former servant of the gentleman, and that his experiment in the marrying line had resulted in practical miscegenation instead of a fortune. He left these parts suddenly, a sadder, but doubtless a wiser man.—Stauaton Vindi-
