The Spoopendyke Bath.

Brooklyn Eagle.

"Now, my dear," said Mr. Spoopendyke, as he bounced out of his bathing house and thumped on the door of the one occupied by Mrs. Spoopendyke, "are you ready? We must hurry into the water and get out again, or we won't get through in time for dinner."

Mrs. Spoopendyke emerged, bent almost double and shivering with the cold. "Isn't it rather chilly?" she asked.

"Not at all, Mrs. Spoopendyke, not at all; the air is rather cool, but the water is warm. If you are going with me you want to move along."

As they reached the beach, Mr. Spoopendyke left his wife and boldly strode into the surf. A wave broke over him, filling his eyes, nose, ears, and mouth and then he strode out.

"What are you standing there for, eh?" he demanded. "What do you take yourself for—a big lighthouse? Did you come down here to take a bath, or are you waiting for some ship to tie up to you? What is the matter with you, anyway?"

"I'm afraid of the waves," whimpered Mrs. Spoopendyke. "they're so big."

"Oh! they're too big for you, ain't they," retorted Mr. Spoopendyke. "Wait till I get a man to saw you off a little one. Better get measured for one to suit, hadn't ye? It's the big waves you want, I tell you. Look here!" and Mr. Spoopendyke marched boldly into the sea again.

Another wave caught him, and landed him high and dripping on the beach.

"Why, didn't ye come when I called ye? What d'ye want to make me walk all the way up here after you for?" shrieked Mr. Spoopendyke. "Are you waiting to be launched like a ship? Can't you walk as far as that? What are you hoisting up the legs of your pants for? They ain't skirts. Now look at me. See how I go in, and you follow me when I beckon to you. Watch me now."

Mr. Spoopendyke plunged in and swished around a few minutes in safety, but the treacherous water was bidding its time. Another wave caught him and rolled him over, pumped itself into his stomach, drew him under, whirled him around, and finally deposited him, howling on the sand.

"Got most ready to go in?" he jerked out, as he climbed up himself and assumed the perpendicular. "Think I'm going to slam around here all day, like a water-spout, waiting for you? What did you come here for? Find any fun standing out there like a soda-water sign? Why don't you get into the water if you are going to? Come on now."

"I'm afraid," sniveled Mrs. Spoopendyke. "If I go in I know I will be drowned."

"No, you won't get drowned, either. Can't you hold on to me? What did you put on the shirt and trousers for if you meant to get drowned? What are you doing around here? Now when I go in again, you come along, or else you go home."

Mr. Spoopendyke plunged into the surf, but as he came up he missed the rope. For a second or two he sprawled around and then began to yell. Mrs. Spoopendyke eyed him for a moment, and then her fears for him overcame her fears for herself, and with a yell she dashed in, and hauled him out by the hair.

"Dod gast the water!" choked Mr. Spoopendyke. "I'm full of the measly stuff. So you got in, didn't ye? Let go of my hair, will ye? Let go, I tell ye! What d'ye think you are anyway—a steam barber shop? Going to let hold of that hair sometime?"

But, frightened out of reason, Mrs. Spoopendyke clung still, and hauled Mr. Spoopendyke to his bathing-house.

"Oh, if I hadn't saved you!" she sobbed. "Oh, yes, you saved me, didn't you?" sneered Mr. Spoopendyke. "All you want is four air-tight compartments and two sets of thole-pins to be a patent life-raft. Are you going to let go of that hair?"

And as she released him they went to their separate apartments.
