Contagious Tuberculosis.

Tuberculosis in contagious and noncontagious form is discussed by Dr. Lawrence Flick in the April number of Lippincott's. According to Dr. Flick the disease is highly contagious when the patient is not scientifically treated. To quote:

"In every case of ulcerative tuber culosis there is a rather long period in which the contagion is intermittent and mild; and a somewhat shorter period in which it is continuous and mild; and a still shorter period, usually about three months before death, during which it is intensely contagious. Protection is of value-and is therefore important-in proportion to the danger; and the best protection is of no value when there is no danger.

"The great danger incident to the last period when the patient is confined to the house and usually to bed is due to the fact that he is in an inclosure. 'Walking' cases do not often give new implantations. The resistance of human beings is too great. Most people can even resist tubercle bacilli day and night for some time until there has been an accumulation ca- ents. pable of breaking down the resistance This breaking-down occurs most fre uently in those who are caring for an advanced case in the bosom of the fam ily, worn out with vigils, overworked oppressed with sorrow, and sometimes emaciated with want; or in those who have taken up quarters which have become contagious environments by reason of the profuse throwing out of tubercle bacilli by former occupants. Ordinarily one does not contract tuberculosis on the street, in the street cars, in church, by casual contact with tuberculosis subjects, or by sleeping for a night or two in a room which has been occupied by a consumptive. But during the last few months of life, the tuberculous subject gives off tubercle bacilli in such great profusion that few people can live in the environment thus created without getting an implantation, unless the tuberculous individual is or has been kept under scientific supervision and control. "Such supervision can make even such a patient harmless, but only when it induces the consumptive to deposit all broken-down tissue in a vessel which can be held close to the mouth. cleanse his lips after each expectoration, hold a paper napkin before his mouth when he coughs, dispose of the utensils and materials used for these purposes in a way to contaminate nothing, and immediately change and sterilize bed and body linens when sputum gets on them. And all of these things must be done exactly right and done always, or else the purpose of the supervision is defeated.

"Only the well-to-do can afford such supervision and control, since it has to be kept up for a long time. The efficient poor that is the working poor, and the dependent poor, or paupers, can get it only through money contributed by private charity or taken out of public taxes.'

How weak we think others are to show impatience! It is so clear to us that impatience in others is a foolish waste of vital force, since it cannot possibly do any good, but we are impatient ourselves, and learn nothing from the folly of others.-Atchison (Kan.) Globe.
